

SWAMI KRIPANANDA

THE SACRED POWER

A SEEKER'S GUIDE TO KUNDALINI

THE SACRED POWER

Althea's Garden

1900

Swami Kripananda

THE SACRED POWER

A Seeker's Guide to Kundalini

 UBSPD

A SIDDHA YOGA™ PUBLICATION
PUBLISHED BY UBS PUBLISHERS' DISTRIBUTORS LTD
IN ASSOCIATION WITH CO-PUBLISHER
GURUDEV SIDDHA PEETH, GANESHPUARI

Copyright © 1995 Gurudev Siddha Peeth, Ganeshpuri (for India, Sri Lanka, Nepal and Bhutan). All rights reserved.

Copyright © 1995 SYDA Foundation® New York, (for all other countries). All rights reserved.

Excerpts from Ancient Wisdom and Modern Science, by Stanislav Grof, copyright 1984 by the State University of New York Press, reprinted by permission of SUNY Press © 1984.

Verses 224, 226, 249, 250, 252, 254, 259, 260, 262, 264, 265, and verses 375-78 from Jnaneswar's Gita, rendered by Swami Kripananda, copyright 1989 by the State University of New York Press, reprinted by permission of SUNY Press. © 1989.

(Swami) MUKTANANDA, (Swami) CHIDVILASANANDA, GURUMAYI, SIDDHA YOGA and SIDDHA MEDITATION are registered trademarks of SYDA Foundation® in the USA, countries of the European Union, and a number of other countries.

No part of this book may be reproduced, translated, transliterated or transmitted in any form or by any means, whether electrical or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or any information storage and retrieval system, without the permission in writing of the copyright holder.

First published by SYDA Foundation,
New York, USA in 1995

Published by UBS Publishers' Distributors Ltd in 1997
by special arrangement with Co-Publisher Gurudev Siddha Peeth, Ganeshpuri.

For sale only in India, Sri Lanka, Nepal and Bhutan.

CONTENTS

Dedication	vii
Introduction by Dr. Deba Brata Sen Sharma	viii
Author's Note	xiii
Invocation	xvii
CHAPTER 1. The Ageless Wisdom	3
CHAPTER 2. Shiva and Shakti: The Primal Parents of the Universe	15
CHAPTER 3. The Descent of the Supreme into Matter	23
CHAPTER 4. The Awakening	31
CHAPTER 5. The Impact of the Divine Power	45
CHAPTER 6. The Unfolding	55
CHAPTER 7. The Chakras: Lotuses of Light	83
CHAPTER 8. The Sahasrara: Merging with the Immensity	113
Appendix	131
Glossary	134
Index	146
Siddha Yoga and the Lineage of Siddha Masters	151
Feather Reading	156

DEDICATION

---

This book is lovingly offered at the feet of Swami Muktananda and Swami Chidvilasananda, embodiments of the grace-bestowing power of the Supreme, who have kindled the flame of Kundalini in countless seekers and led them from darkness to light.

The Guru is the Supreme Cause, the Guru is the ultimate destiny,
the Guru is transcendent wisdom,
the Guru is the supreme refuge,
the Guru is the farthest shore,
the Guru is the supreme wealth.
Because he teaches 'That,'
the Guru is most great.

— Advaya Taraka Upaniṣad 17-18

INTRODUCTION

---

India has a long and unbroken tradition of yogic discipline that dates back to the days of the Indus Valley Civilization or earlier. The large number of spiritual adepts who have lived in India have followed various modes of spiritual discipline (sādhanā) as instructed by their Masters, and through their personal experiences they have enriched our knowledge of yoga. Information about the specific practices they followed is rarely available to us, however, as most of these adepts were reluctant to divulge the secrets of their sādhanā. Yogic knowledge was largely transmitted orally from Master to disciple and, until modern times, that is the way the secrets of Kundalini were passed down to us.

For this reason, there are relatively few references and only sketchy descriptions of the practices of Kundalini Yoga in our ancient scriptures. Therefore we welcome an authentic account of this particular kind of yoga based on scriptural references as well as the practical experiences of its practitioners. Swami Kripananda has done a great service in filling in the gap by producing this wonderful work in lucid language. It is based on the teachings of her Siddha Masters, Swami Muktananda and Swami Chidvilasananda, and she quotes liberally from the scriptural literature on the subject. It also includes many of her own and others' practical spiritual experiences.

There are different versions of Kundalini Yoga expounded by the various traditions, but the basic theory on which this particular form of spiritual discipline rests is the same. Its practice is not confined to India alone, but has been followed by a large number of spiritual adepts and mystics belonging to different faiths and traditions all over the world. Swami Kripananda has quoted from the writings of spiritual Masters, from both the East and the West, to show that this particular form of yoga cuts across the barriers of different countries and faiths. In India, Kundalini Yoga was practised not only by the Hindus, but also by the Jains and the Buddhists who incorporated it into their spiritual discipline in a slightly modified form. This particular mode of sādhanā, however, was made popular by the followers of hatha yoga, the Nātha Yogins, and the followers of the Shaiva and Shakta traditions.

Some of the ancient scriptures advocate that spiritual seekers follow a form of eightfold (asṭāṅga) yoga, including the control of the vital breath (prāṇāyāma) in order to achieve the awakening of the "serpent power" (Kundalini Shakti) and the subsequent piercing of the six cakras. The Nātha Yogins also stressed the necessity of regulating the movement of the vital breath, but they taught that the infusion of divine grace into the disciple by the spiritual teacher (Guru) played a vital role in the awakening of the divine Shakti lying latent in the seeker's body. The Advaita (non-dualistic) Shaiva writers of Kashmir, who hold that the descent of divine grace is the starting point in the spiritual journey of the bound individual soul toward the Supreme, look upon Kundalini Yoga as the basic mode of sādhanā. They consider it indispensable for the attainment of the ultimate goal, which is the realization of one's own nature as Shiva. References to this form of yoga are found in many texts, notably in the Īśvarapratyabhijñānam Kārikā of the sage Utpaladeva, and in Abhinavagupta's great commentary on this work, the Vimarśinī (3:2:19-20). There is also valuable material in Abhinavagupta's own works, the Tantrasāra (V) and the Tantrāloka (V-VI), under the Āṇavopaya section on the prāṇa. The distinguishing feature of the Indian view of spiritual discipline is that it is based, as a rule, on the particular metaphysical theory of the school of thought that prescribes it; as a matter of fact, this provides the rationale for every step in the actual process of sādhanā. This is also true of Kundalini Yoga, according to Advaita Shaivism of Kashmir.

Those who are familiar with the metaphysical thought of Advaita Shaivism of Kashmir know that the embodied bound soul, or paśu, is conceived as being of the nature of caitanya (pure Consciousness). This pure Consciousness is not merely static self-effulgent Light (prakāśa); it is said to be of the nature of vimarśa śakti, dynamic illumination that always shines and reveals itself to itself, and is thus always self-aware. These two, prakāśa and vimarśa, remaining inseparably fused, constitute the integral nature of the Self. Prakāśa represents the static aspect of pure Consciousness called Shiva, and vimarśa symbolizes its innate, ever-vibrating dynamism, which is given the name of Shakti. Since every individual being is of the nature of pure Consciousness, both prakāśa and vimarśa śakti are present, even when the individual is in the embodied condition.

According to yogins, the sahasrāra, or thousand-petaled lotus at the crown of the head, is the seat of the prakāśa aspect of pure Consciousness, or Shiva, while the Shakti aspect of the Self is said to be located in the mūlādhāra cakra at the base of the spinal column, lying coiled like a serpent. The fundamental limitation that causes a person to imagine that he is imperfect is called the anava mala. When the spiritual seeker receives divine grace or śaktipāt from the spiritual Master, this anava mala that covers the Shakti in the mūlādhāra cakra is immediately destroyed.

As a consequence, the Shakti awakens and starts moving upwards through the channel of the suṣumnā nāḍī, from the mūlādhāra cakra to the sabasrāra, to unite with the prakāśa aspect of pure Consciousness, or Shiva. As the divine Shakti begins rising through the suṣumnā nāḍī, the various cakras are revealed and illuminated by its radiance. The seeker is then able to see light of diverse colours and of varying brightness in the different cakras. The brightness of the illumination grows gradually with the absorption of the various elements located in the cakras, and it reaches its culmination when Shiva and Shakti unite at the highest level in the sabasrāra. This illumination is said to be brighter than the light of thousands of suns shining together, with the difference that it does not flicker or produce heat like physical light.

In some cases, spiritual aspirants are said to hear the anāhata nāda, or unstruck sound, which arises from the dissolution of all the varṇas, representing various aspects of Shakti, into the one primordial Sound, the Paravak. All of these experiences have been extolled in glowing terms by mystics.

The illumination mentioned above is sometimes called the "Fire of Consciousness" (cidagni), which, once kindled by the fire of grace from the spiritual Master during initiation (dīkṣā), never dies. It continues to shine and illumine the seeker's intellect, and fills him with eternal peace and bliss. This linkage of the theory and practice of Kundalini Yoga has not been stated by the Shaiva writers of Kashmir, but is implicit in their writings. My own teacher, the late Mahamahopadhyaya Gopinath Kaviraj, shed light on this subject in his lectures on the philosophy of sādhanā. He explained the significance of the term cakra (literally, "wheel") in the following way: As the Shakti enters a particular cakra, it whirls inside it with tremendous force. It gathers increasing force from its revolution and dissolves the elements into itself before rising up to the next cakra. This continues until the sabasrā is reached.

This book on Kundalini Yoga by Swami Kripananda will be welcomed by those who seek to know more about the practical side of Kundalini Yoga as set forth by the practitioners of this form of yoga.

— Dr. Deba Brata Sen Sharma

Dr. Deba Brata Sen Sharma, M.A., Ph.D., is a retired Professor of Sanskrit at Kurukshetra University in India. An eminent scholar in the field of Kashmir Shaivism, he is the author of The Philosophy of Sadhana, published by the State University of New York Press, a work primarily concerned with the Trika philosophy of Shaivism. He is currently translating into English Abhinavagupta's Tantraloka. He is a member of the faculty of the Gurudev Siddha Peeth Indological Research Centre.

A U T H O R ' S N O T E

---

In 1976, at the end of his second world tour, Baba Muktananda gave me a beautiful and challenging command that has profoundly affected my life: he told me to specialize in the area of Kundalini and śaktipāt, to study the scriptures on the subject, and to spend every free minute of my time reading the Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaṇa, "An Investigation of the Six Cakras," a Sanskrit text composed in the 16th century by the great Master Purnananda Swami. In 1980, during his third world tour, Baba began to teach me some of the verses on Kundalini from the Śiva Saṁhitā, the Praśna Upaniṣad, and the sūtras from Swami Vishnu Tirth's Śaktipāt.

Baba's teaching method was both traditional and mystical. He would drill the Sanskrit verses in much the same way a professor would go about it, checking the accuracy of the pronunciation and making sure the words had been memorized correctly. But Baba was also a great siddha, that rarest of beings, who had merged with the Universal Consciousness and who consequently had access to the hearts of all. This invisible access allowed him to give me a direct inner experience of many of the verses he was teaching me on the outside. A siddha is able to bring the scriptures to life; they never remain mere book knowledge, to be accepted on faith. Sometimes, with great wonder, I would sit for meditation and see the coiled Kundalini begin to glow with a fiery heat, like the burner on an electric stove, and then shoot upward through the sūṣumnā nādī in the centre of the spinal column. What I was reading about took on a reality that was alive and beautiful and gave profound meaning to life.

This book is an offering of gratitude for the immense grace that has fuelled these years of study. It is intended primarily for practitioners of Siddha Yoga who have received śaktipāt, the transmission of spiritual power from the Guru to the disciple. The purpose of the book is to help these seekers understand their own experiences of awakened Kundalini and place them within a scriptural and cross-cultural context.

The first chapter gives an overview of Kundalini as it has manifested in different cultures and religious traditions since ancient times. The next two chapters describe the process of involution, the descent of the Supreme from its subtlest state as pure Consciousness down to the material realm of gross matter, finally assuming a dormant form in human beings, coiled at the base of the spine as the Kundalini Shakti. Chapter four deals with the awakening of Kundalini and the various methods by which the Guru gives śaktipāt, initiating the process of evolution, the path of return to pure Consciousness. Chapter five lists the nine different strengths of śaktipāt, from the most intense forms to the slowest and gentlest ones. Chapter six looks at the many different ways that the awakened Kundalini manifests in people's lives, within the four broad categories of kriyāvati, varṇamayī, kalāvati, and vedhamayī. Chapter seven depicts the cakras, their symbolism, the qualities associated with them, and the ways in which seekers may experience their piercing or opening as the awakened Kundalini Shakti rises through them. The last chapter describes the sahasrāra, the centre of pure Consciousness at the crown of the head, and the final state of Self-realization or merging with the Divine, the ultimate goal of human life. May this work help to illuminate the inner journey.

Author's Note

— Swami Kripananda
Gurudev Siddha Peeth
Ganeshpuri, India
5 October 1994

Swami Kripananda holds degrees from the University of New Mexico, Stanford University, and the University of Madrid. Formerly a professor of Spanish at San Jose State University in California, she joined Baba Muktananda on his second and third world tours in the mid 1970s and, under his guidance and direction, began her study of Kundalini. In 1978 she took vows initiating her into the Saraswati order of sannyāsins, one of the first Western women to do so. Swami Kripananda's rendering into modern English of Jnaneshwar Maharaj's great commentary on the Bhagavad Gita has been published by the State University of New York Press under the title Jnaneshwar's Gita. An engaging lecturer and teacher, she has taught Siddha Yoga Meditation throughout the world. She is a member of the faculty of the Gurudev Siddha Peeth Indological Research Centre.

IN V O C A T I O N

---

Just as in waving lights to the sun one is only offering his own light to him, just as in making an offering to the moon with the water of the moon-stone one is only giving back what belongs to the moon, and just as in offering water to the ocean one is returning what belongs to it — similarly, O Source of all Wisdom, this work is addressed to You, composed of words that are already Yours.

— Shri Shankaracharya, Saundarya Labari 100

THE SACRED POWER

---

We pray to the Supreme Goddess united with Shiva, whose substance is the pure nectar of bliss, red like vermillion, the young flower of the bibiscus, and the sunset sky.

Having cleft Her way through the mass of sound issuing from the clashing and the dashing of the prāṇa in the midst of the suṣumnā, She rises to that brilliant energy that glitters with the lustre of ten million lightning flashes.

May She, Kundalini, who quickly goes to and returns from Shiva, grant us the fruit of yoga!

When She is awakened, She is the wish-fulfilling cow of all things desired for those who worship Her.

— Śāradā Tilaka Tantra 35:70

CHAPTER I

THE AGELESS WISDOM

---

Kundalini is the primal power of the universe. She is also the inner power that lifts a person from the darkness of ignorance to the blazing light of supreme wisdom, and grants one a permanent experience of one's own divine nature.

Almost all religious or spiritual traditions speak of Kundalini, the inner spiritual power, in one form or another. The Japanese call it ki, the Chinese chi, and in Christianity it is known as the Holy Spirit. In Mexico, Kundalini was once worshipped as the serpent-god Quetzalcoatl; the Kung people of the Kalahari desert call this same power n/um.* Though the names used to describe it may be different, and though the symbols used to evoke it vary somewhat from culture to culture, Kundalini has been experienced in all places and at all times. It is clearly a universal phenomenon.

Traditionally, the knowledge of Kundalini has been a closely guarded secret, revealed by a Master to only a few close and select initiates. It tends to be spoken of only in veiled and symbolic language, if it is spoken of at all.

Once Swami Chidvilasananda (Gurumayi, as she is widely known throughout the world) paid a visit to Santa

*Pronounced with a glottal stop

Fe, New Mexico, and met a number of Native American women artists. They told her that they, too, know about the energy that is awakened at the base of the spine and rises to the crown of the head. In their tradition, however, it is regarded as so sacred that they are forbidden even to pronounce its name.

The poet-saints and mystics of all traditions have written and sung of classical Kundalini experiences, veiling the truth behind poetic metaphor. One such poet was Kabir, who wrote:

Only a knower understands what our supreme home is like.
Lightning flashes without any clouds.
There is no sun, yet there is brilliant light.
The pearl in that realm appears without a shell.
There is no sound and yet the Word reverberates.
All other forms of light are humbled by the Lord's effulgence.
The Indestructible, Unfathomable lies beyond.
Kabir says, That is my home,
Which only disciples of the Guru can perceive!

In the West, the knowledge of Kundalini has been transmitted by the esoteric or mystical branches of all of its great religious traditions. The knowledge of Kundalini is clearly present in the mystery religions of ancient Egypt, Greece, and Rome; in the teachings of both the Gnostic and the Neoplatonic traditions; in the Kabbalistic tradition of Judaism; and in the testaments of the great Christian mystics. In addition, various secret societies or "brotherhoods" — such as the Rosicrucians, the medieval alchemists, and the Freemasons — emerged to pass on the knowledge of Kundalini.

In Christianity, the Kundalini Shakti is called the Holy Spirit, and it is understood to be the power of God. The Holy Spirit is the creative energy in the universe and also in the human being.

A well-known prayer in the Catholic tradition — "Come, Holy Spirit, and fill the hearts of your faithful. Kindle in them the fire of your divine love" — sounds very much like the hymn we sing in Siddha Yoga, Jyota se Jyota Jagāo, "Kindle My Heart's Flame With Thy Flame."

In the New Testament, the descent of the Holy Spirit occurs at Pentecost, when the Spirit is said to have rested on the heads of the disciples in the form of tongues of fire. Baptism in the Holy Spirit was originally intended to awaken Kundalini, and it is sometimes accomplished by the laying on of hands.

In The Gnostic Gospels, a rendering of an ancient Christian text, it says: "There is in everyone [a divine power] existing in a latent condition.... This is one power divided above and below, generating itself, making itself grow, seeking itself, finding itself, being mother of itself, father of itself, sister of itself, spouse of itself, daughter of itself, and son of itself...."<sup>2</sup> That infinite power exists in two modes, one actual, the other potential.

The Masons speak of the energy, or Spirit Fire, that rises through the spinal column. In Masonry, the science of human transformation consists of moving the Spirit Fire up through thirty-two degrees, or segments of the spinal column, whereupon it enters the skull.

The Hopi Indians of North America have always known about Kundalini. Along the spinal column of man, they teach, runs an axis, on which are a number of subtle vibratory centres.

The first of these lies at the top of the head. Here, when he was born, was the soft spot, the "open door" through which man received his life and communicated with his Creator. Just below it lies the second centre, the organ that man learns to think with by himself, the organ called the brain. The third centre lies in the throat, the fourth centre is the heart, and the last of man's important centres is under his navel:

The first people knew no sickness. Not until evil entered the world did persons get sick in the body or head. It was then that a medicine man, knowing how man was constructed, could tell what was wrong with a person by examining these centres. First, he laid his hands on them: the top of the head, above the eyes, the throat, the chest, the belly. The hands of the medicine man were seer instruments; they could feel the vibrations from each centre and tell him in which life ran strongest or weakest.<sup>3</sup>

The Hopis believe that each human being is created in the image of God, but then the door at the top of the head closes and man falls from grace into the uninhibited expression of his own human will. Now he must begin the slow climb back upward through each of the higher centres, until finally the door at the crown of the head reopens, and he merges back into the wholeness of all creation.<sup>4</sup>

On another continent, a researcher named John Marshall led an expedition funded by Harvard University into the Kalahari Desert in Africa to study the Kung people. They produced several documentary films, the most interesting of which is N/um Tchai: The Ceremonial Dance of the Kung Bushmen. Marshall and his team discovered that the Kung dance for many hours to heat up the n/um so that the kia state (transcendence) can be attained, allowing them to participate in eternity. The n/um rises from the base of the spine to the skull where kia then occurs. There is a N/um master who puts n/um into the student and controls the process from then on. The Kung believe that n/um is not a physical substance; it is instead energy or power, a kind of supernatural potency. They describe their trance state by saying it feels as though they have a hole in their heads, perhaps two inches wide, which extends like an empty column down their spines.

The awakening of n/um also paves the way for physical healing. One of the Kung medicine men says:

You dance, dance, dance, dance. N/um lifts you in your belly and lifts you in your back, and then you start to shiver. N/um makes you tremble; it's hot. When you get into trance, you see everything. You see what's troubling everybody. Rapid shallow breathing, that's what draws n/um up. Then n/um enters every part of your body, right to the tip of your feet and even your hair.

N/um is put into the body through the backbone. It boils in my belly and boils up to my head. The thing comes up after a dance; then when I lay my hands on a sick person, the n/um in me will go into him and cure him.

In your backbone you feel a pointed something, and it works its way up. The base of your spine is tingling, tingling, tingling; and then it makes your thoughts nothing in your head.<sup>5</sup>

Kundalini mystifies even the most eminent psychologists. In 1932, the great Swiss psychiatrist Carl Jung and his colleagues gave a seminar on Kundalini, and they observed that the rising of this force had rarely, if ever, been noted in the West. Jung said, "When you succeed in the awakening of Kundalini, so that she starts to move out of her mere potentiality, you necessarily start a world which is totally different from our world: it is a world of eternity."<sup>6</sup>

The Kabbala, the Jewish mystical tradition, also reflects a knowledge of Kundalini. According to this tradition, the entire universe emanated from God in ten successive stages, the sephiroth, each representing a cosmic principle from the highest spirit to physical matter. The Kabbala teaches that the microcosm, man, is identical to the macrocosm, the universe. So the ten sephiroth also exist within man and, like the cakras, are associated with subtle centres in man's body. The predicament of most human beings, according to Kabbala, is their identification with the lowest centres, with Consciousness trapped in matter. Through intense prayer, meditation, and the repetition of sacred syllables, however, the buried "sparks" of man's consciousness can be fanned into a blazing fire and liberated from their imprisonment in matter, in the darkness of ignorance. Man's consciousness can be raised from centre to centre until it rests in the sephira called kether, which means "crown," and is located at the crown of the head. When his consciousness rests in this centre, the mystic attains an ecstatic vision of God and realizes his own divine nature.

The sephiroth emanating from God were often represented symbolically as a mystical tree, associated with the Tree of Life in the Garden of Eden. Interestingly, according to some Kabbalistic reinterpretations of the Garden of Eden story in the Old Testament Book of Genesis, the serpent is not evil, but is revered as man's greatest ally. It is the serpent who initiates man's search for knowledge of his own true nature, of his essential unity with God.

There are examples of the "serpent power" in the Old Testament. For instance, when the prophet Moses threw down his rod it became a serpent, and through its power he parted the Red Sea and found water in the desert.

In fact, the regenerative power of Kundalini has been represented universally by the image of the serpent. Although in the West the serpent has come to stand for man's sinfulness, the mystic traditions take another view. According to the mythologist Joseph Campbell, the usual association of the serpent "is not with corruption, but with physical and spiritual health. It is symbolic of the power that casts off death to be resurrected."<sup>7</sup>

The modern French novelist and dramatist Romain Rolland once wrote, "I have rediscovered the key to the lost staircase — the staircase in the wall that spirals like the coils of a serpent, that winds from the subterranean depths of the ego, up to the high terraces crowned by the stars."<sup>8</sup>

Saint Ignatius of Loyola, the 16th-century mystic, wrote in his Autobiography that there was a period when he would often see something very beautiful in the air near him, which gave him great consolation. It appeared to be shaped like a serpent and was shining with light. That vision lasted for many days, and soon afterwards he began to experience great changes in his soul, and knew that he was embarking on a new life.

The Aztecs of ancient Mexico worshipped the Plumed Serpent, Quetzalcoatl, known to the Mayas as Kukulkan. This feathered serpent-deity was regarded as the divine force of transformation and regeneration.

On the original altar of the Church of Saint Ambrose in Milan, dating from the 4th century, is a stone carving of a serpent coiled three and a half times — the same form in which we find the sleeping Kundalini in the Indian tradition.

And among the Australian aborigines, "the medicine man receives his power from a rainbow serpent or a water snake which can be seen in the sky. It is this snake that makes the man a medicine man...."<sup>9</sup>

The medicine man is trained to receive and to use that awesome power that governs time, space, matter, and death. He receives it from the group heroes, the historic source of the group, in the eternal dreamtime, through an unbroken channel, a long line of medicine men....<sup>10</sup>

Certain persons (abstracting themselves from what was happening around them and concentrating on the psychic power within them), practised something akin to meditation... During such periods of meditation and vision, when this power and their own thoughts were as one, they would see visions unconnected with earthly life. They would go to the world of ancestral beings. This power is said to be present in all persons, but to be especially developed by a few...."<sup>11</sup>

This power and the rainbow serpent are located in the human body in a psychic centre below the navel. The medicine man acquires supernormal powers:

He learns to see and understand hidden things. He will be able to see before his inner eye past and future events and happenings in other worlds. He learns to read other people's thoughts and recognize their secret worries, and to cure illnesses....<sup>12</sup>

Among the Tibetan Buddhists, many seekers of enlightenment practise Tummo, the yoga of psychic heat. When practising Tummo, the yogi must meditate intensely on the sūṣumnā nādī, the central pathway of Kundalini, and on the īdā and piṅgalā nādīs, the subtle channels on either side of the sūṣumnā, by using complex visualization techniques.

The yogi prays to his lineage of Gurus to confer their "gift-waves" (grace or Shakti) upon him. He prays to the Gurus, saying, "Grant your gift-waves that the vital force may enter into the sūṣumnā. Grant your gift-waves that the ecstatic warmth of the psychic heat may blaze up. Grant your gift-waves that the impure, illusory body may be transmuted. Grant your gift-waves that Buddhahood may be attained in this very lifetime."<sup>13</sup> Little by little, the yogi acquires the power of enduring the most extreme cold, clad only in a single cotton cloth, or without clothing altogether.

In the tradition of Tummo, the Guru frequently tests his disciples to see how much progress they have made. On a frosty winter night with a hard wind blowing, the neophytes are led to the shore of a river or lake. They sit on the ground, cross-legged and naked. A hole is made in the ice, and sheets are dipped in the icy water. Each man wraps himself in one of them and must dry it on his body. As soon as the sheet has become dry, it is again dipped in the water and placed on the novice's body to be dried as before. This goes on until daybreak. The one who has dried the most sheets is the winner of the competition. The yogi is required to dry at least three wet sheets in order to be judged proficient in Tummo.<sup>14</sup>

Saint Teresa of Avila, the great Christian mystic of 16th-century Spain, describes her exploration of the seven inner mansions of the soul, and tells how, in the seventh mansion, the soul finally reaches the spiritual marriage with God. She says:

In the seventh mansion is the King of Glory, in the greatest splendour, illuminating and beautifying all the others. Here at last the soul reaches the spiritual marriage with God. It is like rain falling from the heavens into a river; it is impossible to divide or separate the water belonging to the river from the water which fell from the heavens. Or it is as if a tiny stream enters the sea, from which it will find no way of separating itself. This is the mansion which the Lord reserves as His own and which you will never leave.<sup>15</sup>

Saint Teresa also says that the soul is transformed by an inner fire that consumes all the soul's faults and miseries and makes it pure. She also describes her many Kundalini experiences, such as inner sounds:

My head sounds just as if it were full of brimming rivers, and then as if all the water in those rivers came suddenly rushing downward; and a host of little birds seems to be whistling, not in the ears, but in the upper part of the head, where the higher part of the soul is said to be. I have held this view for a long time, for the spirit seems to move upwards with great velocity.<sup>16</sup>

She also describes the divine inner light, saying:

So different from any earthly light is the brightness and light now revealed to the eyes that by comparison with it the brightness of our sun seems quite dim, and we should never want to open our eyes again to see it.<sup>17</sup>

Among the Igulik Eskimos, a series of initiations culminates with the "lightening" or "illumination," after which the shaman sees inside his head a luminous fire that enables him to penetrate the darkness even with his eyes closed, and to perceive things and coming events of which others are unaware.

The Egyptian mystery schools also taught about the incarnation of the divine principle of light. First, this light descends into darkness, and then for the re-ascent enters the vertebral column of a serpent, whose name is Divine Life. It enters the serpent's tail and exits through its mouth, a journey representing the triumph of light over darkness and the transformation of the human being from the densest matter into light.

This transformation from matter, or darkness, to light and spirit, is the task of Kundalini, the divine conscious power that resides within us. This is why it is essential to awaken Her.

"When one acquires the strength of Kundalini," Baba Muktananda said, "one expands infinitely, and then one assimilates this whole universe. One is able to see the whole universe within one's own Self. One no longer remains a limited, bound creature. One achieves total union with God."<sup>18</sup>

Notes to Chapter 1

- 1 Many of Kabir's poems (see Glossary) describe classical Kundalini experiences. This poem was rendered from a translation of the original.
- 2 Elaine Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels (New York: Random House, 1979), p. 51.
- 3 Frank Waters, The Book of the Hopi (Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin Books, 1977), pp. 11-13.
- 4 Ibid., p. 33.
- 5 John Marshall, N/um Tchai: The Ceremonial Dance of the !Kung Bushmen: A Study Guide (Somerville, Massachusetts: Documentary Educational Resources, Inc., 1957), pp. 3, 19.
- 6 C. G. Jung, Psychological Commentary on Kundalini (Zurich: Spring Publications, 1975), p 18
- 7 Joseph Campbell, The Mythic Image (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1974), p. 286.
- 8 Joseph Head and S. L. Cranston, editors, Reincarnation, The Phoenix Fire Mystery (New York: Crown Publishers, 1977), p. 366
- 9 A.P. Elkin, Aboriginal Men of High Degree (Queensland: University of Queensland Press, 1977), p. 21.
- 10 Ibid., p. 32.
- 11 Ibid., p. 57.
- 12 Ibid., p. 143.
- 13 W. Y. Evans-Wentz, Tibetan Yoga and Secret Doctrines (London: Oxford University Press, 1958), pp. 182-83.
- 14 Alexandra David-Neel, Magic and Mystery in Tibet (London: John Lane, 1931), pp. 227-29.
- 15 Saint Teresa of Avila, The Interior Castle, translated and edited by E. Allison Peers (Garden City, New York: Image Books, 1961), p. 214.
- 16 Ibid., p. 77.
- 17 The Life of Teresa of Jesus, translated and edited by E. Allison Peers (Garden City, New York: Image Books, 1960), p. 260.
- 18 Swami Muktananda, Kundalini, The Secret of Life, 3rd edition (Delhi : UBSPD, 1995), p. 8.

Shiva can create only when He is united with Shakti. Without Shakti, He cannot stir. For this reason, how can an ordinary person bow down to You to praise You, O Mother, who is worshipped by the deities of creation, preservation, and destruction?

—Shri Shankaracharya, Ānanda Laharī 1

CHAPTER 2

SHIVA AND SHAKTI:

The Primal Parents of the Universe

Although the mysterious force of Kundalini is known throughout the world, the Indian tradition has structured and organized this knowledge into its most comprehensive form. Kundalini is worshipped in India and in many other cultures as a manifestation of the divine cosmic power that has created the universe, also known as the Great Goddess, the Devi, or Shakti. She is the creative energy of Shiva, the formless Absolute, and She manifests the universe out of Herself and within Herself. She has vibrated into all the billions of forms that we see around us.

Baba Muktananda said: "She doesn't create this universe the way a human being builds a house, using different kinds of materials and remaining different from those materials. She creates the universe out of Her own being, and it is She Herself who becomes this universe.... She is that supreme energy which moves and animates all creatures, from the elephant to the tiniest ant."

The Devi is the Mother aspect of the Supreme. She is the creator and nourisher of the world and is worshipped primarily because of Her compassionate heart.

It is said that when the great sage Shankaracharya was living in Varanasi in the 8th century, he would go every day to the banks of the Ganges where he would teach his students Advaita Vedanta, the philosophy of non-dualism. One day he found a dead body blocking his path, and a young widow keeping vigil over it.

Shankaracharya's disciples asked the widow to make way for their great teacher, but she ignored them. Then Shankaracharya himself gently asked her please to move the body and allow them to pass. When she ignored him too, he asked her a second time. The young widow looked at Shankaracharya and said, "Why don't you ask him to move?" This puzzled the sage, so the woman continued, "You teach non-dualism, but you yourself are guilty of dualism. You have taught only half the truth. You worship only Lord Shiva; you have ignored Shakti, the great Goddess. She is the Power that has created the entire universe. If you worship Her, you will be able to bring this body back to life."

According to legend, this young widow was the Divine Mother, who had assumed that particular form to teach the eminent sage a lesson. From that day on, Shankaracharya became a great devotee of the Goddess and composed many beautiful hymns in Her praise. In one of them, he says:

O Mother! You have many worthy sons on earth,
 But I, Your son, am of no worth.
 Yet You should never abandon me;
 A bad son may at times be born,
 But a bad mother there can never be.
 I have no desire for liberation,
 Neither for wealth,
 Nor for knowledge.
 O Moon-faced One! I do not wish for happiness.
 I only beg this of You,
 That I may spend my life in the recitation of Your names:
Mridāñi, Rudrāñi, Śiva, Śive, Bhavāñi.<sup>2</sup>

Shakti has three forms or degrees of subtlety. The first is Her supreme form, which is unknowable. Next there is Her subtle form, which consists of sound or mantra, through which all forms vibrate into existence. But the mind cannot easily grasp the subtlety of these first two forms; so Shakti appears in Her third form, which is gross or physical, as a beautiful woman with hands and feet and so on, as celebrated in the Devīstotra, the hymns to the Devi in the Pūrāṇas and the Tantras. It is in this form that She is worshipped by Her devotees, who contemplate Her indescribable beauty: "O Bhavani! I worship Your form upon which Shiva gazes with great love, and who, as if not satiated by looking at You with two eyes, has made for Himself yet a third."<sup>3</sup>

The Shaivite scriptures describe Her as "the will-power of God, the ever-young maiden called Uma."<sup>4</sup> She is ever-young because She is always playing; and Her play is nothing less than the creation, sustenance, and dissolution of the world.

Shiva is pure Consciousness, the static centre of all things, the substratum of all change. The Shiva principle can never be seen; it can only be known by its effects. It is dependent on Shakti, the active or dynamic aspect of Consciousness, to bring it into manifestation. We can come to know Shiva only through Shakti. Jnaneshwar Maharaj expresses this very poetically:

Now I pay my respects to the God and Goddess who are the limitless primal parents of the universe.

The lover himself, out of boundless love, becomes the beloved, and the beloved becomes the lover.

Each taking the place of the other, they reside on the same charming spot. They are made of the same substance and share the same food.

They are so averse to separation that not even their child, the universe, can disturb their union.

Seated on the same ground, wearing the same garment of light, they dwell together in eternal bliss.

✓ How sweet and mysterious is their union! Though the whole universe is too small to contain them, they dwell together happily in the tiniest particle.

Each regards his spouse as his very life, and neither creates so much as a blade of grass without the other.

Abashed at the nakedness of Her formless husband,
She weaves the universe of names and forms from Her very being, and clothes Him in it as a resplendent garment."<sup>5</sup>

The Devi is also Mahamaya, the great māyā, the enchantress of the universal dream, the world-bewilderer. When Kundalini lies asleep at the base of the spine, the Divine Mother takes this form of the great illusion — the illusion of separateness from God and from the world, the illusion of duality and multiplicity.

To understand māyā, take a look around you. See what the world looks like: sometimes enchanting and beautiful, at other times frightening, unpredictable, and confusing; a world of myriad names and forms, of infinite variety; a world that even according to modern physics is not what it seems to be. The apparent solidity of the objects around us, the scientists say, is an illusion. The world-appearance that we regard as reality is actually vibrating energy, Shakti, the Divine Mother, "whose eyes, playing like fish in the beautiful waters of Her divine face, open and shut with the appearance and disappearance of countless worlds, now illuminated by Her light, now wrapped in Her terrible darkness."<sup>6</sup>

This cosmic Shakti also takes the forms of many individual goddesses, who represent the various aspects of the one universal Energy. Her three principal forms are Kali, Lakshmi, and Saraswati. Although their attributes and manifestations are diverse, each has the capacity to take us back to the primordial One.

Kali, often represented as the consort of Lord Shiva, embodies His power to dissolve, destroy, and devour. Dark and terrifying, She is portrayed wearing a garland of skulls around Her neck and dancing in cremation grounds. Yet by Her very ferocity She bestows the supreme boon of liberation, destroying our faults and weaknesses, our ignorance and our desires.

Many years ago when I was browsing through a London art museum, one work in particular captured my attention. It was a statue of the Goddess mounted on a lion, brandishing weapons in Her many hands, riding toward a hideous monster who stood at the head of his demonic hordes, armed and ready for battle. She was obviously about to take them all on single-handedly. Part of me dismissed this image — what fairy tale does this illustrate, I wondered. Yet on some deep level it was extraordinarily compelling.

Years later I came to understand that that Goddess was Kundalini Shakti in Her aspect as Durga or Kali. When She is awakened within us, She goes to battle against the inner demons: desire, anger, greed, pride, delusion, jealousy, doubt, resistance, laziness, and so on. Despite the ups and downs we may experience in the course of our spiritual practice, She is ultimately victorious. She is the divine force of transformation that brings us from a spiritually dormant state to full awakening.

One of the most beloved and widely worshipped forms of the Goddess is Lakshmi, the consort of Vishnu, who accompanies him in his function of sustaining the universe. She represents all the things we need for a good life: beauty, abundance, good fortune, splendour, generosity, and both material and spiritual wealth. While Mother Kundalini in Her destructive aspect as Kali goes about consuming our dark, poisonous tendencies, She gradually sets our inner being in order. This new sense of interior harmony is a quality of Lakshmi, and it is often reflected outwardly by increased prosperity, abundance, and success in our worldly lives.

Saraswati, the consort of Brahma the Creator, is the goddess of music, knowledge, fluency in speech, and creative inspiration. As we become increasingly purified, clearer and cleaner within, these qualities of Saraswati come to us as Her gifts, culminating in divine wisdom, the knowledge of the Self.

Gurumayi has said:

We call the Goddess by different names depending on the aspect of Her power we wish to invoke. Shakti is called Saraswati when She gives knowledge and wisdom, when She gives inner experiences of the Truth. She is called Shri Lakshmi when She takes the form of good fortune and abundance. She is called Radha when you experience great devotion, because Radha is the personification of devotion. She is called Durga or Kali when She destroys all that must be destroyed in you, all that is holding you back.<sup>7</sup>

Shiva and Shakti

Notes to Chapter 2

- 1 Swami Muktananda, Kundalini, The Secret of Life, 3rd edition (Delhi : UBSPD, 1995), p. 5.
- 2 A rendering of the Devī Aparad Kṣamāpana 3:8.
- 3 A rendering of Bṛuvaneśvara 17, from the Tantrasāra.
- 4 Śiva Sūtras 1;13.
- 5 From an unpublished rendering of Amritānubhav, by George Franklin.
- 6 Lalitā Sahasranāma 18, 281.
- 7 Swami Chidvilasananda, "Creating a Body of Light," Darshan magazine 41/42 (1990), p. 163.

Homage to Him who paints the picture of the three worlds, thereby displaying His amazing genius: to Shiva, who is beautiful with the hundreds of appearances laid out by the brush of His own unique, subtle, and pure Shakti.

— Ramakantha, Spandakārikā Vivṛtti

CHAPTER 3

THE DESCENT of the SUPREME into MATTER

"Shakti, leaping up in delight, lets Herself go forth into manifestation."<sup>1</sup> Shakti creates for the sheer ecstasy of it. As Shakti begins the creative process and streams into manifestation, She assumes progressively denser and grosser forms, in the same way that steam becomes water and solidifies into ice. It is a process of contraction and limitation, known as involution, in which Consciousness becomes involved in nature.

This same process takes place within the human being. Shakti exists in Her limitless, infinite, expansive state in the sabasrāra, the highest spiritual centre located at the crown of the head. Here Shiva and Shakti are in union. The sabasrāra is utterly transcendent, beyond the mind, beyond name and form. When Shakti is in this topmost centre, one does not perceive the world; one perceives only all-pervasive light. Yet even this is merely an attempt to describe the indescribable.

As Shakti begins to descend through the suṣumnā nāḍī, the central channel extending from the base of the spine to the crown of the head, She moves into the area of the "Pure Creation" between the sabasrāra and the ājñā cakra at the space between the eyebrows. As She moves downward through the pure principles of unity-awareness, which are experienced in this region, the world begins to take shape in one's awareness and gradually comes into clearer focus; nevertheless, the subject and object are still perceived as one. The split has not yet occurred.

Right above the ājñā cakra, Shakti hits the prism of māyā and is refracted through it. Unity-awareness is broken up and dispersed. The subject is severed from the object.

Māyā has been called "the mirror trick that breaks the All into the many." Lord Krishna tells Arjuna: "This divine māyā of Mine is difficult to overcome. Those who take refuge in Me alone can overcome it."<sup>2</sup> And Jnaneshwar Maharaj adds that anyone who thinks he can overcome māyā by his own efforts is a fool; one can overcome māyā by divine grace alone.

Everything is actually one energy; it just appears to be broken up. This is true of the macrocosm (the universe) as well as the microcosm (the human body). Shakti descends into manifestation in progressively denser forms.

As Shakti continues to descend, She reaches the ājñā cakra, the centre of the four psychic instruments: the mind, the intellect, the ego, and the subconscious mind. Then the gross material elements appear — ether in the viśuddha cakra at the throat, air in the anāhata cakra at the heart, fire in the manīpūra cakra at the navel, water in the svādhiṣṭhāna cakra in the sacral area, and earth in the mūlādhāra cakra at the base of the spine.

At this point, a human being is ready for life in the material world, and he is equipped with four different bodies to suit his needs:

- (1) The subtlest is the supracausal body or Blue Pearl, a brilliant dot of blue light the size of a lentil seed, in which one experiences the turiya or transcendental state of the Self. Its seat is the sahasrāra.

- (2) The causal body is represented by a black light the size of a fingertip, in which one experiences the state of deep sleep. Its seat is the heart.
- (3) The subtle body may be seen in meditation as a white light the size of a thumb. In this body one experiences the dream state, and its seat is the throat. The subtle body interpenetrates and vitalizes the physical body, and is composed of millions of nādīs, subtle channels that carry the prāṇa throughout the system.
- (4) The gross physical body is associated with a red light the same size as the human body, in which one experiences the waking state. Its seat is the eyes. A seeker may see this in meditation as a steady red aura which envelops him inside and outside, and spreads right through him.

Earth, or solid matter, is the last and grossest tattva, or principle of creation. The Shakti then stops Her creative activity, and She rests in a coiled form like a serpent. She is now Kundalini Shakti, the Serpent Power, whose dwelling in the human body is in the mūlādhāra cakra at the base of the spine. The Sanskrit word kundala means "coiled." Kundalini literally means "that which is coiled." The feminine ending denotes the female aspect of the energy that exists in its coiled, dormant state. Residing in the centre of the body, She controls our entire physiological system through the complex network of nādīs. She is the power behind the mind and the senses and provides the energy for all our activities. The Ānanda Labarī says:

O youthful Spouse of Shiva! You are the mind, ether, air, fire, water, and earth. You have transformed Yourself into the universe. Beyond You, there is nothing. In Your play, You manifest Your consciousness and bliss in the form of the universe."<sup>3</sup>

In this outer aspect, Kundalini is always awake; it is Her subtle inner aspect that is dormant and must be awakened.

At this point, at the end of the process of involution, we have completely lost sight of the Self, our divine origin, the pure Consciousness of the sahasrāra, and have become engrossed in the outer world of phenomena. We are caught up in the world. We are trapped in the ego, as surely as if we were caught in a web.

The supreme Self is omnipotent, all-powerful. There is nothing it cannot do. The Shaivite scriptures explain that māyā throws a series of cloaks over the Self. These cloaks conceal our true identity. They are part of the family of māyā, and they limit the powers, or śaktis, of Consciousness. These cloaks are called kañcukas.

The first kañcuka is called kalā. This first cloak limits the Supreme's power of omnipotence and shrinks its capacity to act to that of an ordinary human being. In other words, there are some things we can do, and some things we can't do.

The second cloak that māyā throws over the Self is called vidyā. This limits the Supreme's power of omniscience; this cloak produces limited knowledge in the individual soul. There are some things we know, and there are a lot of things we don't know.

The third cloak is rāga. Rāga reduces the Supreme's condition of completeness or perfection. We no longer feel whole and entire, sufficient unto ourselves. So this cloak causes desire and love for particular objects. We start looking around for something or someone else who will make us feel complete and whole.

The fourth cloak is kāla, which limits the Self's condition of eternal existence. It creates time and the sequential order of things — past, present, and future. This cloak makes us afraid that time is running out. It leads to the fear of ageing and of death.

And the fifth and last cloak is niyati, which limits the Supreme's all-pervasiveness or omnipresence. We understand that we are here in our own living room; we are not in Bali or Madras.

Is it any wonder that we can't recognize ourselves as the supreme Self? It has shrunk and contracted all its powers, or śaktis, and has become a limited individual soul. The scriptures say that in this condition we have śakti dāridrya, poverty of Shakti. We wander around in fear and ignorance of who we really are, the Supreme Lord.

This is our plight. Instead of identifying ourselves with our great Self, we identify with our body and our ego. But the scriptures and great beings remind us that if we fully unfold our śaktis or powers, we are nothing but supreme Shiva. The human body is actually a storehouse of vast power, and the object of sādhanā is to raise these various forms of power back to their full expression. We have to retrace our steps and return to our source.

How do we do this? The root of all our latent powers is the Kundalini Shakti. She must be awakened from Her dormant state at the base of the spine and then retrace Her steps, climbing back up through the various principles of creation represented in the cakras in the suṣumnā nāḍī. This is the process of evolution.

When Kundalini finally becomes established in the sahasrāra, the union of Shiva and Shakti takes place. This is mokṣa, liberation from the cycle of birth and death, the ultimate goal of human existence. This is why all cultures and spiritual traditions revere and worship Kundalini Shakti; without Her, Shiva cannot be attained. For this reason, the devotee earnestly implores the divine Shakti to set him free from his worldly bonds and afflictions:

O Chandi! Wander in my heart!
 Destroy the calamities that besiege me,
 Arising from the malice and the fears that pursue me,
 So that, free from danger,
 And protected by Your lotus feet,
 My mind may swim and revel in the ocean of bliss.
 O Mother! May showers of holy devotion to You Always rain upon me,
 Struggling and drowning
 As I am in the endless ocean of illusion, Without a taste of the water of the bliss of the Absolute.<sup>4</sup>

Notes to Chapter 3

1 Kshemaraja, Śiva Stotrāvalī Tika.

2 Bhagavad Gita 7:14.

3 Ānanda Lahari 35.

4 A rendering of the Mabiśarmardini Stotra 1 and 7, from the Tantrasāra

That glory is more hidden than the hidden. But when the look of the Guru falls upon one, one is overwhelmed and that glory becomes the most obvious of obvious things.

— Maheshvarananda, Mabārbamāñjari 66

CHAPTER 4

THE AWAKENING

The various spiritual traditions employ a wide variety of means to awaken the dormant Kundalini. Some practise severe austerities and fasting, while others recommend concentration techniques involving mantra repetition, chanting, self-inquiry, or solving difficult riddles which short-circuit the mind. Still others make use of complex visualization techniques that involve raising fire up through the susumna nādī. Also, certain haṭha yoga āsanas, bandhas, and types of prāṇāyāma force the current of prāṇa to enter the susumna and awaken Kundalini.

In fact, much of the scriptural literature on Kundalini deals primarily with the problem of waking Her up. People often try to awaken Her through arduous means. A typical example is the following passage from the Yogakundalī Upaniṣad:

Sitting in the full lotus posture, a wise man should take Kundalini up from Her resting place to the middle of the eyebrows. When the prāṇa is passing through the left nostril, he should inhale sixteen digits. Then he should bind the saraswati nādī (west of the navel) by means of the lengthened breath, and holding firmly together both his ribs near the navel by means of the thumbs and forefingers of both hands, he should stir up Kundalini with all his might from right to left over and over again. He should do this fearlessly for forty-eight minutes.

By this means, Kundalini enters the mouth of the sūṣumnā nādī. Then he should draw himself up a little, compress the neck and expand the navel. Then, by vigorously shaking the sarasvatī nādī, the prāṇa goes up through the sūṣumnā to the chest. By contracting the neck, the prāṇa moves upward from the chest.<sup>1</sup>

This is just the beginning. A lengthy section follows, consisting of many different prāṇāyāma exercises accompanied by bandhas, or locks, to force Kundalini to awaken and rise through the sūṣumnā. In addition to being difficult and time-consuming, these techniques never carry any guarantee of success and may even be dangerous if performed incorrectly and without expert supervision.

Fortunately, there is an easier way. The scriptures also speak at length of the need for divine grace, which enables a seeker to tread safely this path, which is described as being "as sharp as a razor's edge."

Shaivism speaks explicitly of grace as being one of the five functions performed by supreme Shiva: "I bow to the Divine, who brings about emanation, maintenance, reabsorption, concealment, and who bestows grace, destroying the affliction of those who bow to Him."<sup>2</sup>

Emanation refers to the creation of the universe. Lord Shiva maintains what He has created; then He reabsorbs the creation into Himself. Concealment is the state in which the creation remains within Him in a potential or seed form before being remembered or re-created. Bestowal of grace brings about the complete merging of the creation into the universal consciousness, eradicating all impressions and all opportunities for subsequent remembrance. Grace is the action by which God once again reunites us with Himself.

The Sufis say that the spiritual goal is reached by grace alone and that if you were destined to reach God only after the destruction of your faults and the abandonment of all your claims, you would never reach Him.

Becoming more explicit, the Śiva Sūtra Vimarśinī states that the Guru is the grace-bestowing power of God. It is the Guru who functions as the instrument through which the Divine bestows grace, which occurs by means of a process known as dikṣā, or initiation.

Another Shaivite scripture explains: "Dikṣā grants realization and destroys all impurities. It is called dikṣā because it imparts that realization that awakens one from the sleep of ignorance. It has the characteristics of both giving (di) and destroying (ksa)."<sup>3</sup>

The yoga sūtras on śaktipāt (literally, "the descent of Shakti") go on to say that śaktipāt alone is initiation, that śaktipāt happens only through the grace of the Guru, and that during śaktipāt the Guru transmits the Shakti into the seeker.<sup>4</sup> The Guru throws sparks of divine fire into the disciple, and they in turn ignite the seeker's own dormant Kundalini Shakti.

Baba Muktananda said:

Many lesser teachers can effect a partial awakening, but Kundalini soon becomes dormant again, leaving the seeker in an anxious state. A lot of people who met me during my world tours said, "My Kundalini was awakened three years ago, but now it is asleep again." This is what happens when one does not have the grace of a perfected Master, and such an awakening does not serve much purpose. Only a Guru who has received the blessing of the Supreme Goddess and his own Guru and who has received the command to perform śaktipāt, can bring about a permanent awakening that can take the seeker to the final goal.<sup>5</sup>

A noted Indian scholar, M. P. Pandit, says:

Whatever the path chosen and discipline selected for the seeker, no real sādhanā begins till a relation is established between him and the Guru. And this relation starts from the moment an inner connection is made between the two as a result of something from the consciousness of the Guru entering into the being of the disciple. This entry of the Guru into the disciple is aptly described as the impact or descent of the higher Power, the conscious Power of the Guru, or of the very Divine through him: śaktipāt. Where this śaktipāt is not, say the scriptures, there is no fulfilment.<sup>6</sup>

The four ways in which the Guru classically gives śaktipāt are through a physical touch (sparsa dīkṣā), word (mantra dīkṣā), thought or will (saukalpa or mānasa dīkṣā), and look (drik dīkṣā).

Sparsa Dīkṣā: Initiation by Touch

The Guru can give śaktipāt by touch in a variety of ways: perhaps through a brush of a wand of peacock feathers, or the Guru may lay his or her hand on a seeker's head, press the point between his eyebrows, or touch him on the back. Even a casual touch from the Guru can awaken the inner Shakti.

One woman said that after Gurumayi touched her head during an Intensive she had a vision in meditation that her whole head had opened up. The top of her head "exploded," and all around her there was a gorgeous blue-black sky studded with stars. She felt an indescribable peace. A gentle, serpentine energy was moving very slowly at the base of her neck, creating waves of ecstasy throughout her whole body. She lost all sense of time. The following day, during meditation, a bolt of energy soared up through her. She felt her heart burst open and she began to sob and laugh at the same time. Then the serpentine energy turned into a shaft of pure white light and shot up through the top of her head. Suddenly, she found herself at the centre of the universe. All things were her and she was all things. And all of time, from the beginning to the end, was apparent to her, was in her, and of her. She began to cry with joy, understanding that all her years of study, of searching, and of longing, had been for this.

Sometimes the Shakti is transmitted through an object that the Guru has touched; the Shakti is contagious. Baba used to have a beautiful, sleek Rottweiler named Madhu, who lived in Baba's house. He was enormously fond of Madhu and would often pet him and stroke him with great affection. It's not surprising that Madhu was permeated with Shakti. At one point, when Madhu was feeling unwell, a veterinary surgeon was called in. As he began to examine Madhu, he felt a bolt of energy pass into him and he began to experience tremors. Mystified, the vet wanted to know what was going on. So Baba's attendant had to explain to him about Kundalini, śaktipāt, and the Guru, right there on the spot.

Baba loved this story and often chuckled about it. One day he called me and told me to put it in my next Kundalini talk. "But," Baba added, "be sure you tell people that this doesn't mean that Madhu was the vet's Guru!"

Mantra Dīkṣā: Initiation by Word

Śaktipāt can also be given through the Guru's mantra. The mantra given by a Siddha Guru is a caitanya mantra, one that is alive with conscious force, as opposed to a jada, an inert, mantra that one might select from a book or hear from a friend. The Guru received the mantra from his or her own Guru and has attained realization through fully unfolding its power. Behind it is the Shakti of the entire lineage of siddhas, and that Shakti is passed on to the disciple through the syllables of the mantra.

One man received a mantra card in response to a letter he had written Baba. He sat for meditation and started repeating ॐ नमः शिवाय। He became very relaxed and found the mantra drawing his awareness into some deep, empty space inside himself. At one point he stopped repeating the mantra, but it immediately began repeating itself within him. The reverberation of ॐ नमः शिवाय got stronger and stronger until he was engulfed in the ocean of the mantra's vibration. Then, an explosion took place. His awareness, his sense of who and what he was, began expanding infinitely in every direction until there was nothing in the universe that he was not. There was an inconceivable ecstasy. Then he became aware of a screen on which hundreds of images were passing by in rapid-fire fashion. He realized that what he was seeing was the screen of his own mind. The images were of everything stored away in his mind, from this lifetime and many other lifetimes in the past. Yet, in his blissful state of infinite Consciousness, he knew that his existence was totally separate from that of the mind he was witnessing.

My own experience of śaktipāt happened through the mantra. I began to visit one of Baba's meditation centres in California in 1972. Within a week after I started using Baba's mantra, I had a very powerful experience. In meditation, I saw a rectangle of brilliant white light approaching me. When it reached the space between my eyebrows, I felt a tremendous pressure and suddenly everything burst into white light. There was no more "me," as I had always thought of myself — there was only light, which felt like the essence of everything. After a short time, the light condensed back into a rectangle, which moved away and vanished. Then Baba appeared and explained that this had been my "dikṣā," a word I had never heard before. He showed me the image of a tubular fireman's chute. I saw that I had just been put into the top of the chute and that from then on, no matter what I did, I would very naturally reach the bottom and exit into safety and freedom. I came out of this experience with a tremendous pressure at the ājñā cakra, which continued unabated for two weeks. This was the beginning of a fascinating process.

Saṅkalpa or Mānasa Dīkṣā: Initiation by Will or Thought

Sometimes the Guru gives śaktipāt through will, thought, or intention. Because the Guru principle is all-pervasive, the Guru does not have to be physically present in order to do this. Years ago in Gurudev Siddha Peeth, a man went up to Baba and showed him a photograph of a group of people. He pointed to a particular woman in the photo and said, "Baba, this is my wife. Could you please give her śaktipāt?" Baba studied the photograph for a few moments and then said, "Yes, she will get it in three days." Several weeks later the man received a letter from his wife, who was at their home in California. A curious thing had happened to her, she said. She had been washing dishes at her kitchen sink one day when she was suddenly gripped by a powerful force and her body began to perform spontaneous haṭha yoga postures. She asked her husband to tell Baba about it and ask for his advice and blessings. The husband realized from her description that they were physical kriyās, movements of the body impelled by the awakened energy. And this had occurred three days after he had shown Baba her photograph.

Mānasa dīkṣā is probably the most frequent way śaktipāt is given in the Siddha Yoga Meditation Intensives. Even when Gurumayi is not physically present, she can awaken the Shakti in this way.

Drik Dīkṣā: Initiation by Look

The Guru may transmit the Shakti to the seeker through a look or glance. Or the seeker may receive śaktipāt by looking at the Guru, either directly or at a photograph or other image.

An English couple had a housekeeper who never met Gurumayi. In fact, although she regularly cleaned their meditation room and saw the many pictures of Gurumayi, Baba, and Bade Baba in their house, she never referred to them and never asked about them. The couple in turn did not discuss meditation with her as they did not know what her beliefs were. Several years ago they went to South Fallsburg to spend time with Gurumayi. On their return, their housekeeper told them that while they were away, she was cleaning their bedroom. She was dusting a cupboard that contained some videos of talks by Gurumayi. One of the videos was entitled "The Self Reveals Itself," and it seemed to jump out at her. She thought that she would take a look at it, and she watched the talk. At the end of the video Gurumayi gives some meditation instructions, and the housekeeper thought that she would try to see if she could meditate for just a minute or two, as she had never done it before. She closed her eyes and almost immediately felt a powerful surge of energy running through her body. It seemed to start at the base of her spine and when it rose up to her head, she began to see hundreds of brilliant lights. Her breathing became very shallow and fast, and she kept seeing the brilliant lights and feeling the energy in her body.

Eventually, after how long she didn't know, she opened her eyes and her gaze locked on to a photograph of Gurumayi on the dresser to her left.

She decided to go out for some air, and she went downstairs and opened the door. Everything outside seemed to be sparkling. All the trees and leaves and grass were so beautiful, and she felt such a feeling of love and happiness — she had never experienced anything like it before. She wished that everyone in the world could experience what she was feeling. It was so incredible.

Baba Muktananda tells us in his autobiography, Play of Consciousness, that he received śaktipāt through drik dīkṣā from his Guru, Bhagawan Nityananda. Baba says:

He looked into my eyes once more. I watched him very attentively. A ray of light was coming from his pupils, and going right inside me. Its touch was searing, red-hot, and its brilliance dazzled my eyes like a high-powered bulb. As this ray flowed from Bhagawan Nityananda's eyes into my own, the very hair on my body rose in wonder, awe, ecstasy, and fear. I went on...watching the colours of this ray. It was an unbroken stream of divine radiance. Sometimes it was the colour of molten gold, sometimes saffron, sometimes a deep blue, more lustrous than a shining star. I stood there, stunned, watching the brilliant rays passing into me....<sup>7</sup>

Afterwards, as Baba was walking home, he experienced identification with the Absolute. He had an intuition of the One in the many and he transcended the ordinary mind that differentiates between the inner and the outer world, that sees the many in the One.

He says:

I repeatedly opened and closed my eyes. When I shut them I saw innumerable clusters of sparkling rays and millions of tiny twinkling sparks bursting within me. I kept watching them. What a beautiful sight! Those infinitely small sparks were shimmering and coursing through my whole body at an incredible speed. I looked with wonder and awe at their speed and their number. Then I opened my eyes again. Again there were masses of the same tiny, scintillating, blue sparks coruscating around me. I was overcome with awe and ecstasy.... Even today I can remember that experience of oneness. I still see those tiny blue dots.<sup>8</sup>

Once someone asked Baba if Kundalini could be awakened accidentally. "Yes," he replied laughing, "but only if an 'accident' takes place between a Guru and a disciple... When a disciple who is full of devotion meets a Guru who is saturated with Shakti, Kundalini is awakened immediately."<sup>9</sup>

Because those who live in the Ashram see so many people receiving śaktipāt, sometimes we begin to take this great gift for granted. This happened to me a few years ago; the miraculous had become almost commonplace. During this time I had a dream in which Baba and Gurumayi appeared to me and said, "You must understand the greatness of śaktipāt." Then they showed me what happens at the moment the Guru transmits the Shakti into a seeker. I saw that it was God's energy entering the person and filling him with light. I woke up, overcome by a sense of the divine and filled with awe. And I resolved never again to underestimate śaktipāt. It is the most significant moment of a person's life.

Gurumayi speaks of śaktipāt: "When the ascent of the disciple's love meets the descent of the Guru's love, an eternal bond is formed in the heart. Without that bond, there is no true relationship with the inner Self."<sup>10</sup> Most of us who have received this great and divine gift realize that we were never truly alive before.

The scriptures caution that it is the Guru's function not just to awaken the Shakti; he or she must also control its functioning thereafter. This is one of the greatest mysteries of the Guru and of the sādhanā performed under the guidance of such a being. When someone asked Baba how this was possible, particularly in the case of his many thousands of disciples who were not able to spend much time around the physical Guru, Baba replied:

The Shakti pervades the entire world, from east to west, from north to south, above and below. It hasn't spared anyone. Although a disciple may be far away from me, the Shakti is the same there as well as here. I have to lose myself in the Shakti; only then does the Shakti work everywhere for everyone. It is all-pervasive, but I have the switch to turn it on....

When a being loses himself in the light, he becomes a perfect Guru. God is of the form of divine light. If I lose myself in that light, then I have perfection and complete Guruhood. When we worship a Guru, we don't worship his physical body. We worship him with the awareness that he is the supreme and all-pervasive light."
||

Notes to Chapter 4

- 1 Yogakundali Upaniṣad Chapter 1.
- 2 Śvacchanda Tantra 1:3.
- 3 Utpalabhatta, Spanda Pradīpikā 3:7.
- 4 Swami Vishnu Tirtha Maharaj, Śaktipāt — Kundalini Mabayoga (Sanskrit/Hindi edition; Devas, Madhya Pradesh: Sri Sadhan Granthamala Prakashan Samiti, Narayana Kuti, Sannyas Ashram), 2:5, 4:8, and 1:7.
- 5 Swami Muktananda, Kundalini, The Secret of Life, 3rd edition (Delhi: UBSPD, 1995), p. 26.
- 6 M. P. Pandit, Studies in the Tantras and the Veda (India: Sterling Publishers, 1988).
- 7 Swami Muktananda, Play of Consciousness, translated by Swami Chidvilasananda, (Ganeshpuri : Gurudev Siddha Peeth, 1995), p. 72.
- 8 Ibid., pp. 69-70.
- 9 Swami Muktananda, In the Company of a Siddha, revised edition (New York: SYDA Foundation, 1985), p. 127.
- 10 Swami Chidvilasananda, unpublished talk, August 14, 1985.
- 11 In the Company of a Siddha, p. 132.

It is difficult to describe in words the experience I had when His grace flowed into my heart, into my mind, and into my eyes. My frame swelled to immense proportions. He broke the cage that had imprisoned my soul and released me from the numerous principles of creation. My eyes drank His light in full and I lived in His grace.

—Tirumular

CHAPTER 5

THE IMPACT of THE DIVINE POWER

---

Why do people react differently to śaktipāt? It is a question of our saṃskāras, or past impressions. The yoga sūtras on śaktipāt say, "Kriyās occur, not because of the will, but because of the saṃskāras."<sup>1</sup>

We retain all the subtle impressions of our past experiences throughout countless lifetimes, and these experiences of course differ from one person to another. These impressions, or saṃskāras, are both positive and negative and are what compel us to act and react in certain set patterns of behaviour. They are the cause of our mental and emotional conditioning. Our saṃskāras determine how we react to śaktipāt — the intensity with which we receive it and the types of kriyās that it produces.

For this reason, even though the Guru bestows grace equally on all his or her disciples, the result is never exactly the same. If the Guru's Shakti enters a seeker who is pure and whose saṃskāras have been weakened through previous sādhanā, it will work in him very quickly. If all his nādīs (subtle channels through which the prāṇa or life-force flows) are pure and clear, he will receive Shakti with the greatest force. Conversely, if a seeker has done very little sādhanā or none at all, if his saṃskāras are strong and unyielding, and if his system is full of impurities, it will take the Shakti a long time to do its job. This is why people react very differently to śaktipāt.

One day a seeker asked Baba, "When you give śaktipāt to us at an Intensive, do you give it to us in the same way and with the same strength that your Guru, Bhagawan Nityananda, gave it to you?" Baba replied, "The question is, do you receive it the way I received it?"

A person receives as much as he can hold. The great saint Ramana Maharshi once said that the grace of the Guru is like the ocean. If a seeker comes with a cup, he or she will receive only a cupful. There is no use complaining that the ocean is miserly. The bigger the vessel a seeker brings, the more he will be able to take away. It is entirely up to him.

During an evening programme some years ago, a woman prayed intensely to Baba for a higher state of consciousness. As she was riding home after the programme, she began to experience dizziness. She opened the car window to get some fresh air. Suddenly, she said, she was catapulted into an exalted state. But she realized it was like throwing a supercharge of electricity into a little twenty-five-watt bulb: she was not yet equipped to handle it.

The power of the Shakti is like fire. One has to be able to withstand it. The higher states of consciousness will come at the right time — when one's body has become strong and pure enough to hold the tremendous force of the Shakti.

As Dante wrote, "Throughout all the universe God's ray enters all things according to their merit, and nothing has the power to block its way."<sup>2</sup>

Abhinavagupta, the great 10th-century siddha and master of tantra, yoga, philosophy, and the arts of poetry and drama, wrote numerous works on the philosophy of Kashmir Shaivism, among which are his Tantrāloka and Tantrasāra. In these works he discusses the varying intensity and types of śaktipāt. He has broadly analysed the nature of śaktipāt according to three types: (1) tīvra, very intense; (2) madhya, of moderate intensity; and (3) manda, of low intensity. He has further broken down each of these categories into three sub-groups, which he discusses one by one. He adds at the end that each of these nine types of śaktipāt can in turn be broken down into three additional sub-groups, bringing the number to twenty-seven, and then each of these can also be further categorized into many subsidiary types.<sup>3</sup>

- (1) A person who receives tīvra-tīvra (the most intense variety of intense śaktipāt) attains spontaneous knowledge of the Self and instantaneous liberation. He immediately understands that the pure, limitless, and blissful Consciousness is his own Self, and he sees everything as a reflection appearing in that Consciousness. However, the force of the Shakti is so intense in this form of initiation that his system cannot withstand it, and he soon leaves his body. He becomes a Master in the subtle realms.
- (2) A person who receives tīvra-madhya śaktipāt (still intense but less so) also experiences a spontaneous realization of the Self, but he does not leave his body. He remains in this world as a Master for the upliftment of mankind.
- (3) A person who receives tīvra-manda śaktipāt (the slowest variety within the intense category) does not experience spontaneous realization, so he must find a Guru. He attains the highest state through the Guru's look, word, thought, or touch. Through these first three degrees of intense śaktipāt, Lord Shiva creates Masters. With the less intense varieties of śaktipāt, He creates disciples.

- (4) A person who receives madhya-tīvra (the strongest of the moderate degrees of śaktipāt) goes to a Master, but a touch or a glance of the Master will not enlighten him. The Guru initiates him into a mantra and teaches him how to follow the spiritual path. He fully attains his divine nature only when he leaves his physical body.
- (5) In the madhya-madhya degree of śaktipāt, a person has an intense desire for Self-realization; however, he also retains some desire for worldly pleasures. When he leaves his body, he goes to a celestial realm to experience the pleasures there until he is fully satisfied. He receives initiation once again in that realm, and there he merges into Shiva.
- (6) A person who receives the madhya-manda degree of śaktipāt has a greater desire for worldly pleasures than he does for Self-realization. When he leaves his physical body, he goes to a celestial realm to satisfy his longing for enjoyment. Then he must take birth again on earth as a yoga brahma, one who has practised yoga but was unable to complete his sādhāna in his previous lifetime. He continues his spiritual practice and attains perfection in this birth.
- 7-9) A person who receives the manda, or least intense, variety of śaktipāt has a strong attachment to worldly life. He yearns to attain Self-realization only when things go badly for him. At that time he may decide to renounce everything and dedicate himself exclusively to spiritual practice, but he is unable to sustain it. He attains liberation in stages by taking birth in some higher world and then returns to this physical world to live out all his karmas and desires. This occurs over and over again until he eventually attains the highest state.

Abhinavagupta says:

When one follows the path of the transcendental Reality by adhering to the teachings of the Guru, one suddenly becomes Shiva Himself as a result of extremely intense śaktipāt. Another person climbs the ladder of the tattvas step by step, reaches the ultimate Principle, and finally identifies himself as Shiva. But a person who stops midway in his meditation and does not reach the supreme Reality is called a yoga brahma by the scriptures. When he dies he becomes a lord in the worlds of pleasure, and due to the effect of the stage of meditation he attained, he will reach Shiva in a later birth.<sup>4</sup>

Sometimes when people hear about the varying degrees of śaktipāt, their immediate reaction is to become discouraged over how impure they are and how slow their progress is. Fortunately, however, the Shakti meets us wherever we happen to be along the spiritual path and then moves us along from there. It is the task of the Shakti to purify us, so no matter how impure and blocked we may think we are, the Shakti will gradually remove those impurities and uplift us. We can cooperate with Her by doing the practices — meditation, chanting, repetition of the mantra, selfless service — and by living a life of discipline and moderation. In this way, our vessel is purified and strengthened so it can hold the tremendous power of the Shakti.

Abhinavagupta says, "Just as a face clearly appears in a spotless mirror, in the same way, the Self shines in all its splendour in the mind purified by Shiva's śaktipāt.<sup>15</sup>

Baba once said, "I give you a divine spark; now it is your job to convert that spark into a forest fire." Our spiritual practices fan the flames of Kundalini so that She blazes with great brilliance.

A woman I have known for many years received śaktipāt from Baba and immediately began to have dramatic experiences of inner music, visions of light, and powerful currents of energy streaming through her body. Her husband was intrigued and signed up for an Intensive. Apparently nothing happened to him — at least not the standard signs he was looking for. But he was regular in his practices; every evening he and his wife would sit together for meditation in a beautiful room they had set aside for spiritual practice. It was always the same — his wife would meditate and have wonderful experiences, while he would sit and listen to his mind chatter away. After a while, when he couldn't stand it any longer, he would get up and busy himself with household chores, repairing the kitchen sink or resurfacing the floor.

A few months later he decided to take a second Intensive, and then a third — but things stayed more or less the same. No noticeable experiences, no deep meditation. Yet he still kept sitting every evening without fail. Then one night his body suddenly moved into physical kriyās, with powerful bandhas and prāṇāyāmas. At last, a concrete sign that Kundalini was awake in him!

What had happened? Baba used to say that some people are like wet logs. When fire is set to a piece of wood that is green or damp, it must first dry out the wood before it can blaze. In the same way, in many people the Shakti functions very subtly for some time, doing Her initial work of preparing the system for the more intense forms of manifestation later on.

Each seeker must begin his spiritual journey from where he stopped in his previous life. Baba once used the analogy of eating lunch and then taking a nap: when we wake up our lunch is still in our stomach. In the same way, if we do sādhanā but die before reaching the final goal, we will begin our next life with whatever level of attainment we achieved in our former lifetime.

A few years ago, a nine-year-old boy came to the South Fallsburg Ashram with his parents. He immediately began having visions of various kinds even with his eyes open, travelled to different galaxies, and saw scenes from previous lifetimes. Another little boy, aged eight, came to Gurudev Siddha Peeth from his home in Bombay, and his mother took him to the meditation hall in Turiya Mandir. When he sat to meditate, he said, a powerful force began to rise from the base of his spine with a serpentine motion through a number of different centres. When it reached his throat there was an explosion of light, and then a small snake continued to rise on up to the crown of his head. Afterwards, he made a watercolour painting of his vision, showing the cakras with the suṣumnā, the central channel, and the īḍā and piṅgalā nāḍis on either side of it.

These experiences were not accidental; they were the result of yogic practice in a previous birth. These two young boys were undoubtedly *yoga brahma*s, and their accumulated merit and sādhanā were now bearing fruit in this lifetime. As soon as they entered the Ashram, the Shakti caught them with great force.

Some people complain that God or the Guru is partial and gives more grace to some than to others. But the Shaivite philosophers point out that, in the first place, the whole question of bondage versus liberation exists only as a concept in the mind. Since there is nothing in the universe that is not Shiva, how could God be partial or impartial to Himself? The appearance of bondage and liberation is merely His play on the stage of His own being.

Although we can make certain generalizations about grace, its functioning remains a divine mystery. Usually it depends on a person's receptivity. The Guru is like the sun, which sheds its light equally on all; but if we go inside a building or stand under a tree, the sun's rays will not touch us. Nevertheless, there are some people who have to seek grace for a long time before it is granted to them. The poet-saint Kabir had to go to great lengths in order to receive Ramananda's grace. He concealed himself in Ramananda's path so the Guru would step on him and call out the mantra in surprise. On the other hand, there are many cases where grace descends on a person who apparently is not the slightest bit interested and who is not consciously seeking it.

Again, the Shaivite philosophers remind us that there is no scope for any kind of "why" in a state of absolute independence. If God were stripped of His independence, He would cease to be God. He is simply manifesting this play of bondage and liberation in accordance with His unlimited will.

The Impact of the Divine Power

Notes to Chapter 5

- 1 Swami Vishnu Tirtha Maharaj, Śaktipāt — Kundalī Mahāyoga (Sanskrit/Hindi edition, Devas, Madhya Pradesh: Shri Sadhan Granthamala Prakashan Samiti Narayana Kuti, Sannyas Ashram) 4:12.
- 2 Dante, Paradiso, Canto 31.
- 3 See Swami Lakshman Jee, Kashmir Shaivism, The Secret Supreme (Delhi : Sri Satguru Publications, 1991), pp. 66-70.
- 4 Paramārthasāra 96-99.
- 5 Ibid , 9.

When the Kundalini Shakti is awakened, those devotees should not be considered ordinary. They comprehend unseen things, their bodies throb and tremble, their voices choke with tears of love, and they are filled with bliss. When fire enters iron, it does not remain just iron. Similarly, when Kundalini Shakti awakens in human beings, they do not remain mere human beings. They become filled with divine love, divine powers, and divine virtues.

— Vāyavīya Sambitā 2:11, 35-39

CHAPTER 6

THE UNFOLDING

Once Kundalini is awakened, She begins the enormous task that awaits Her — removing all the obstacles and impurities that lie in Her path, cleaning our inner house from top to bottom. In fact, soon after I received śaktipāt, this was a vision that would recur now and then in my meditations:

I had been given a small house to live in, which was charming but quite dirty. I set to work doing what I could with a dust cloth and vacuum cleaner. Then an army of serpents — very friendly ones — would arrive to help me with the deep work that lay beyond my reach. One of them would slither into the bathtub, another into the toilet, a third into the handbasin, and a fourth into the kitchen sink. They would turn into serpentine drain cleaners, scouring out the deep subconscious saṃskāras lurking under the surface of my awareness. All of this kicked up a tremendous amount of dust and grime, and for a while it made an awful mess. But eventually the chaos subsided, and I was left with a glistening little house, freshly scrubbed and much more pleasant to live in.

The yogic scriptures explain that the saṃskāras are stored inside the suṣumnā nāḍī, and when Kundalini awakes and enters the suṣumnā, She begins to dislodge and expel them.

A man described an experience he had in meditation of this process of purification. He was in a beautiful walled garden on a huge estate. He was the owner of that place, and he was weeding the garden, parts of which were tremendously overgrown. He began to clear away a beautiful path that led to a high stone wall covered with weeds. This took a while. Everything had to be cleared, up to and including the wall. When he started pulling down the vines and creepers, he saw, much to his surprise, that underneath them was a huge, beautiful, double wooden door that had been completely concealed. After struggling for a while, he was finally able to open it. When the doors swung open, he stood there in astonishment. Outside the wall, in exact alignment with the path he had just cleared, was a road that went all the way out to infinity, and into an incredible panorama of blue light. It was a living blue light. A humming sound, an angelic Oṁ, emanated from it and filled him with awe.

Baba Muktananda said:

Whatever thoughts one has come from the central nādī, and all one's karmas and impressions from many lives are lodged here. All the different states we experience — desire or greed, inspiration or dullness — arise from the sūṣumṇā. In the upper region of the sūṣumṇā are such qualities as contentment, peace, and knowledge, while in the lower regions lie the passions of lust, greed, anger, and all the feelings of insecurity and inadequacy. When your Shakti is awakened, all the past impressions and karmas come out. That is why when you first receive śaktipāt, you sometimes feel very negative or very angry. You shouldn't be afraid when you get into such a state; it happens because the Shakti is expelling all the karmas of countless lives.<sup>1</sup>

While the samskāras are being removed, they rise into our awareness and we experience them, sometimes with great intensity. If our mind has a tendency to become agitated, for example, our agitation may seem to get worse for a while. If we have a problem with fear, our fearfulness may increase temporarily. We must understand that this process is beneficial, however, and that the Shakti is cutting away at the very roots of our tendencies. At these times the best thing to do is witness the process, with gratitude that these things are being eliminated from our system. Indulging the samskāras, acting them out, judging them, or repressing them — these approaches are not helpful. Kundalini will expel the tendencies from our system in due course. Meanwhile, we can cooperate with the process by simply witnessing it.

There is no way to predict what will happen next, or when. The awakened Kundalini Shakti usually does not purify all the cakras in a linear sequence. Most often She skips around, working in one area for a while, then in another. You never know when the most sublime experience awaits you.

Early one morning I was sitting for meditation in my room when my alarm rang to announce that it was time to go downstairs for chai before the recitation of the Guru Gītā. I was halfway to my feet when, suddenly, I had a vision in which the crown of my head opened to reveal a dazzling white lotus of a thousand petals — the sahasrāra. It was exquisite. The petals were alive and pulsing with energy; they resembled whirring wings. I gazed at it in amazement and promptly sat down again. I decided not to be in such a hurry!

The awakened Kundalini Shakti unites with the prāṇa, the vital force, and streams through the entire subtle and physical system. The subtle body is a body of energy or light interpenetrating the physical body. It is the seat of the mind and the emotions, and is the body in which we experience our dream state. It is composed of millions of nāḍīs, subtle conduits that carry the prāṇa. The Shakti purifies all the nāḍīs and strengthens the body. The blockages and impurities in the nāḍīs are what produce the imbalances in our system and are responsible for our physical and mental disorders. Once Kundalini gets rid of these blocks, our mind is purified and our negative tendencies and patterns leave us permanently. The yoga sūtras on śaktipāt describe the effects of this process: "One becomes intoxicated with divine feelings and becomes free from anger and other negativities."<sup>2</sup>

As the samskāras are eliminated, we notice a corresponding transformation of our inner state, which in turn is reflected in our outer lives. Old bad habits and addictions fall away; our creative abilities are unleashed, and we receive guidance and insight from within. One woman said that at the end of the first year after her śaktipāt experience, she was a different person. She completed her doctoral thesis and several other books, and she had stopped smoking. She said there was order in her house and order within herself. She got along much better with other people. And, above all, she never again felt the anguish and loneliness that had characterized her inner state for so many years.

We find that our anger diminishes, and we stay centred in times of stress. One man said that before he met Baba he had been a professional hockey player. He had played hockey from the age of three. He described it as a tough, violent game and said that in order to play you need some aggressiveness, some anger, and a bit of violence. When he went to Miami to spend the winter with Baba, his sevā was in the kitchen, chopping vegetables. While he was chopping, something strange happened — he could feel waves of anger. They would rush through his body, and sometimes they were so strong that he would actually see red in front of his eyes. He remembered Baba saying that when an emotion like anger comes up, don't act on it, just witness it. So that's what he did. He just watched it. During the four months he spent with Baba, a great deal of the anger that he had accumulated in his life playing hockey was expelled by the Shakti.

As a result of experiencing the Self, our perception of ourselves and of others changes. We identify less with our ego and more with our higher Self. A woman who lived in Gurudev Siddha Peeth for some time said that it became her habit to go up on the Ashram roof after the morning Guru Gītā chant to watch the sun come up and experience a few moments of solitude. One morning she was surveying the landscape, when she fell into a meditative state. She suddenly became aware that a presence — other than what she usually thought of as herself — was looking through her eyes. This presence was an infinite, dispassionate awareness that was simply seeing without judging or analysing what it saw. It was so compelling that her attention was forcibly drawn to it. She became aware that it was also hearing through her ears; in fact, it was functioning through all her senses. Her entire body was pervaded with that Consciousness; it was the very essence of her life. She lost herself in this experience. She understood that this Consciousness was absolutely changeless, eternal, and infinite. The state accompanying this experience was entirely free from anxiety, need, and expectation.

Gradually, she began to regain awareness of the world around her. She was looking out at a small hill in the distance, and she could see that on the hill there were trees and small bushes. She suddenly realized that if no one had ever told her that the tree was different from the hill, and that the bush was different from both of them, it never would have occurred to her to separate them. She would have considered them all to be parts of the same thing, a unified whole. She realized that by giving names to certain forms, we ourselves create the many out of the One. She perceived that this dispassionate, eternal Consciousness was functioning through the bodies of every living creature. In fact, the entire world was its body. It was seeing itself through every eye, and hearing its sounds through every ear. She understood that all perception of difference is the mind's creation.

After some time the experience subsided and she came down from the roof. In the days that followed, she realized that her entire outlook had undergone a radical transformation. Before, she had been a very judgmental person. She thought some people were high and others low, some great and others small. But now, everywhere she looked she saw only equality. Each person was an embodiment of that one immutable Consciousness.

After saktipāt we may find a growing capacity to love unconditionally, and our depression may gradually disappear. A Shaivite scripture says, "The ignorant man does not observe the most precious wealth lying in his body, and feels overwhelming depression in his heart. If the Supreme Goddess, who delights in bringing into being the entire universe, enters his heart, then She reduces to ashes the depression that had been plaguing him."<sup>3</sup> A woman came to Gurumayi, saying that her life was falling apart. Her marriage of fifteen years was on the rocks, and her dream home was about to be snatched away from her. After the woman took an Intensive and received śaktipāt, she said that a shift took place. For the first time in her life, she had a sense of something deep inside her that did not need any outer support. She knew that as long as she remained anchored in that centre, she could meet any calamity that life might bring her with courage and detachment.

As the awakened energy moves us through personal limitations, we gradually become fearless. When we come to understand and trust the Shakti, we gain the ability to let go and allow things to flow naturally. We become free from our anxieties and our tendency to worry all the time.

After her Kundalini was awakened, one woman said, she was able to talk to her mother for the first time in twenty years. And a painter managed to produce enough paintings in the first six weeks following śaktipāt for an entire show because the blocks had been removed from his creative expression.

As Baba has said:

For this awakening, you do not have to abandon your normal pursuits. Do not think that daily life goes against the pursuit of God. If this beautiful, vast world were against God-realization, God would not have created it. God created this variegated cosmos for His own delight, to honour Himself, to create a place where He could revel in His glory. So you can visit that divine place inside while living your normal life; you can visit it again and again, any number of times.<sup>4</sup>

When the divine Shakti awakens within us, She increases our spiritual capacities. She gives us a new interest in spiritual life and the ability to meditate. Our cravings diminish and a previously unknown detachment is born in us. We become deeply content and serene.

For this reason, the ancient sages worshipped the Shakti and prayed for Her help and Her constant presence in their lives. There is a beautiful prayer in the Rg Veda that says, "O Almighty Lord, may we, armed with Your powerful divine Shakti, completely annihilate our inner vices in the struggles of life and be victorious."<sup>5</sup>

Because the samskāras embedded in the suṣumnā differ from one individual to another, people's reactions to śaktipāt vary greatly in intensity, as we have already seen. They also vary in terms of the specific form they take. The yoga sūtras on śaktipāt list four broad classifications of śaktipāt according to the ways in which it manifests. They are kriyāvati, kalāvati, varṇamayī, and vedhamayī.<sup>6</sup>

Kriyāvati

Kriyāvati manifests as kriyās, movements of the physical body caused by the awakened energy, and it is associated with haṭha yoga. A person may spontaneously perform āsanas or postures, bandhas or locks, mudrās or hand gestures, and prāṇāyāma or breathing processes. He does not do these things intentionally; they happen through the force of the awakened Kundalini. In fact, the whole science of haṭha yoga was developed by the sages' observations of those who were experiencing a kriyāvati type of awakening. They discovered that a careful and systematic duplication of those postures could help to awaken Kundalini in others.

In order to avoid complications, however, a person should attempt these practices only under the guidance of a Master. When these postures and locks occur automatically as the result of receiving śaktipāt from a Siddha Guru, they are completely safe. Their occurrence shows that they are necessary for the purification of the system.

A young man who was a professional dancer contracted rheumatoid arthritis at the age of nineteen. By twenty-two he was unable to continue his career, and when he was twenty-four he walked with a cane and was stooped over. He had been to many hospitals and had taken many drugs to get rid of his pain and suffering, but to no avail.

At this point he received śaktipāt and felt a bolt of energy enter him right between his eyebrows. As it began to circulate throughout his whole body, powerful physical kriyās took place. His legs locked into the lotus posture, he started bouncing up and down like a frog, and every joint in his body began to crack. His back lurched backward and his head bent back all the way to the floor.

After about four months, he could straighten up his body. After six months, he put his cane away. His horrible ordeal was over, and he was completely healthy again.

The bandhas, or locks, stabilize the prāṇa, cleanse the nāḍīs, and still the mind for meditation. The three locks are mūla bandha, where the heel locks itself against the anus, forcing it to contract; uddiyāna bandha, in which the breath is expelled and the stomach is drawn in; and the jālandhara bandha, where the chin is pressed down on the throat.

There are many different kinds of mudrās. Some of them, such as the mabā mudrā, are advanced baṭha yoga techniques that force the prāṇa into the sūṣumṇā and awaken Kundalini. They create pressure, making the Shakti rise and pierce the cakras, the subtle energy centres in the central channel. Then, from the cakras, the Shakti radiates outward into all the nāḍīs, purifying them.

Another variety of mudrā is hand gestures, which seal the energy inside the body. They unite the different currents of prāṇa, just as rivers converge; then these currents flood the cakras with energy. Two of the most common mudrās are the abbaya mudrā, the gesture of dispelling fear, and the varada mudrā, the gesture of granting boons. In the abbaya mudrā, the hand is raised with the palm outward. In the varada mudrā, the palm is extended outward horizontally and facing up. All the deities in the cakras are shown making these two mudrās.

Some years ago, a few of us were returning to Gurudev Siddha Peeth late at night following a programme in Bombay. A ten-year-old girl who was with us became sleepy and stretched out across our laps in the back seat of the car. Soon she was fast asleep. After a short time, she seemed to enter a state of meditative sleep and began performing classical yogic mudrās with the grace of an accomplished dancer. We were amazed at their beauty and perfection.

In another mudrā, sometimes the tongue curls back upward against the palate and into the nasal pharynx. This is the khecharī mudrā, and it opens the way to the sabasrāra and allows divine nectar to be released. Yogis often spend years trying to accomplish this on their own, and may slit the frenum a little at a time to allow the tongue to lengthen. But khecharī mudrā may occur as a kriyā in Siddha Yoga.

A woman said that during a talk about meditation in an evening programme in South Fallsburg, Gurumayi mentioned that when you reach a particular stage of meditation certain mudrās start to occur, including the khecharī mudrā. The woman had never heard of that before, and a deep longing arose in her, to the point that she began to weep. A few days later during a chant of ॐ नमः शिवाय, she went into a state of bliss. Suddenly, a powerful energy began to shoot up through her body, and her tongue started to move. It curled up and tried to find its way to the back of her mouth. She thought, "This can't be possible," as the force became stronger and stronger. As her tongue rose up against the palate, she said a rain of nectar fell, a sweet liquid that was unimaginably delicious and cool at the same time. As the experience waned, she thought perhaps half an hour had gone by, but when she looked at the clock, she saw that three hours had passed.

The śambhavi mudrā is a state of spontaneous samādhi, or meditative union with the Absolute, in which the gaze becomes focused within, although the eyes remain half open and appear to be looking outward. A woman said that during an evening programme in Gurudev Siddha Peeth she was watching Gurumayi, who was sitting motionless in śambhavi mudrā. At one point the woman started to merge into the mudrā. Gurumayi's gaze was like an open door, and the woman walked in. Suddenly, her whole awareness shifted to an experience of the Absolute. There was only That — the source of all creation. It was utterly still and infinite. She described it as becoming the container instead of the contained, becoming the pitcher instead of the water. It permanently altered her life and gave her a tremendous motivation for sādhana. ||

Prāṇāyāma, regulation of the breath, also purifies the prāṇa and stabilizes its flow throughout the body. The prāṇa and the mind are intimately connected. When the flow of the prāṇa is smooth, the mind grows calm and meditation comes easily. In bbastrikā prāṇāyāma, the breath is drawn forcefully in and out, like a blacksmith's bellows. Kumbhaka is the retention of the breath. These two types of prāṇāyāma frequently occur involuntarily as kriyās following śaktipāt.

A woman said that during her stay in Gurudev Siddha Peeth, she went to the statue of Lord Shiva in the upper gardens and chanted the Siva Mahimnā Stotram. Afterward she fell easily and naturally into meditation. As she listened to the mantra repeating itself inside, her eyes and her awareness were drawn up very powerfully to the top of her head. She watched with fascination as the Shakti played with her breath, drew it in and held it for a long time, then drew it out so thoroughly that her stomach seemed almost to touch her backbone, and then held it out for a long time. She recognized this as kumbhaka, a practice that yogis attempt for years and years, and here it was happening to her effortlessly. Her mind would stop, and there would be a space, luminous and infinite, filled with peace.

The texts on haṭha yoga say that, ordinarily, the prāṇa circulates through the īdā or moon nādī at night. At that time, the mind and body are lethargic and want to sleep. Yogis are told not to eat when the prāṇa is flowing through īdā; the accompanying state of relaxation and coolness makes it difficult to digest food. The prāṇa flows through the piṅgalā or sun nādī during the day, and the mind is restless and active. Neither of these conditions is conducive to meditation; the mind is either lethargic or restless. Only when the prāṇa enters the sūṣumnā does the mind turn within and enter a state of meditation. This is why yogic āsanas and practices have as their primary aim forcing the prāṇa out of īdā and piṅgalā and into sūṣumnā. When the prāṇa leaves īdā and piṅgalā, they are said to "die"; that is, they are relaxed and devitalized.

The two periods of sāndhyā, the hours of twilight at dawn and in the evening at dusk, are times of transition when the prāṇa is shifting from īḍā to piṅgalā, or vice versa. They are moments when it is easier for the prāṇa to be diverted into the central channel. For this reason, these two periods of twilight are regarded by the scriptures as being particularly auspicious for spiritual practice. When the prāṇa enters the suṣumnā, Kundalini awakens and rises along with the prāṇa through the central channel to the crown of the head, producing the state of samādhi.

In an esoteric verse describing this process, a Shaivite scripture says, "If one hopes to assure the perpetual and indivisible blossoming of one's own heart, one must split the centre where the sun and moon set."<sup>7</sup>

This happens naturally, with no forcing, after śaktipāt. In meditation one can often feel the breathing shift as the prāṇa enters the suṣumnā. The prāṇa may enter subtly, or with a great roar and sensation of heat.

Gurumayi has said:

When the Shakti is awakened, when both the sun and the moon merge in the royal path, in the suṣumnā nāḍi, in the column of light, then you are able to see quite vividly what is right and what is not, what is needed and what is not, what should be done and what should not. There is absolute certainty, absolute confidence because of this experience.<sup>8</sup>

When the prāṇa enters the suṣumnā, the suṣumnā opens up and begins to unfold. The Pratyabhijñābhṛdayam says, "When the central nāḍi is unfolded, one acquires the bliss of Consciousness."<sup>9</sup> Baba called the unfolding of the suṣumnā "the pilgrimage to liberation." The awakened Kundalini rises through the central channel, purifying it of all the stored past impressions, piercing the cakras, loosening the three knots, and leading the seeker ultimately to the bliss of union with the Divine.

These āsanas, bandhas, mudrās, and varieties of prāṇā-yāma occur as spontaneous kriyās when and if necessary after a person receives śaktipāt. Not everyone needs them. Baba used to say that kriyās are medicine, and he would add, "If you don't have any disease, why should you take medicine?"<sup>10</sup> The Shakti causes them in order to remove particular blockages. When those blocks are removed, the kriyās are no longer necessary. And there is no way to predict how long a particular kriyā will last. In some seekers they are of short duration, whereas other people may experience them for years. Kriyās help purify the body and prepare it to withstand the impact of the Shakti.

A woman who received śaktipāt at an Intensive with Baba said that her body suddenly shot up in the full lotus posture and she began to do spontaneous bhastrikā prāṇāyāma. She burst into uncontrollable laughter, and then wept deeply. She was worried that she was disturbing everyone else's meditation, but there was very little she could do about it. That afternoon, as she joined the darśan line, Baba saw her coming. He got excited and pointed at her, while speaking in Hindi to the people around him. Later on, they told the woman what Baba had said: he had described her experience in minute detail, even though he had left the meditation hall by the time it happened. The woman said she felt a profound sense of oneness with Baba.

In Baba's words:

What friend can there be like the Shakti-bestowing Guru who, through the inner yogic movements, cleans like a washerman all the limbs and organs of the body...who cleanses its nerves clogged with impurities, and takes away all its disorders...?

Working like servants and labourers, he burns up all the inner dirt and incinerates it in the fire of yoga until the body is pure gold."

I remember a dream I had several years ago in Gurudev Siddha Peeth. A small group of beautiful women who resembled goddesses approached me and said, "You are going to go through the fire and become gold." They were very kind and explained that there was nothing to worry about, that this was a sacred fire, and to go through it was a great privilege. They began to wrap a wet towel around my hair so it wouldn't burn. Then a second 'I' watched from a few feet away as an intense golden radiance suffused my body. Around my legs and feet I could see flames leaping up, but they were subtler than earthly fire. And soon, my whole body turned to burnished gold. I understood that this was the great work being carried out by Kundalini, the fire of yoga.

Varnamayī

Just as kriyāvali pertains to baṭha yoga, varṇamayī pertains to mantra yoga. Vocal powers that had previously lain dormant are awakened in a seeker. He may begin to utter words, sentences, and mantras in Sanskrit or other languages that are often completely unknown to him.

As we will see in the next chapter in our discussion of the cakras, all mantras, syllables, and sounds are found within us. Each petal of every cakra is associated with a particular sound or letter of the Sanskrit alphabet, and these sounds emanate from the cakras.

A man who now stays in the South Fallsburg Ashram, New York, had extraordinary experiences of a varṇamayī awakening. He would feel the Shakti surging up from the base of his spine like a fountain of energy.

As it rose through the sūṣumṇā it would begin to vibrate in the cakras, and a rapid staccato series of sounds would issue from his mouth like a machine gun. This happened involuntarily, and the sounds were completely foreign to him. One day several Indian men who were sitting near him in the meditation hall told him that he had just recited the entire Sanskrit alphabet in sequence!

He would utter certain syllables which turned out to be bija mantras, or seed letters, also associated with the cakras. In addition, he found himself making sounds that resembled the bellowing of a buffalo, the barking of a dog, the roar of a lion, the hissing of a serpent, and various bird calls. This phase lasted a few months; then it never happened to him again.

Another man found that when he sat for meditation after receiving śaktipāt, his hands would immediately begin to make involuntary movements. He would touch his stomach, his heart, his throat, and the space between his eyebrows. And as he was touching these places, he began to intone strange sounds — brīmī, śrīmī, bumī. He had no idea what he was doing, and yet it had a profound effect on his meditation. Two years later while he was leafing through a yogic scripture called the Mahānirvāṇa Tantra, he found the explanation: it was a yogic technique known as nyāsa, in which the subtle body is infused with prāṇa. He had been touching the areas of his body that contained cakras, and the sounds he had been making were bija mantras, or Sanskrit seed syllables. He had never studied yoga or Sanskrit, but he was able to execute perfectly an esoteric technique as it was described in a scripture written in India hundreds of years ago.

Vāyamayī also includes literary inspiration and poetic composition. A number of writers have had their writer's block permanently removed by this kind of awakening. One woman went home from her first Intensive and wrote a three-hundred-page novel!

The great German composer Richard Wagner once said that a trance-like condition is the prerequisite of all true creative effort. He felt that he was one with a vibrating force, that it was omniscient, and that he could draw upon it to an extent that was limited only by his own capacity to do so.

Another well-known German composer, Richard Strauss, said that when he was in his most inspired moods he had compelling visions involving a higher Self. He felt at such moments that he was tapping the source of infinite and eternal energy, from which all things proceed, and which religion calls God.

In other examples of varjamayī, intuitive wisdom arises. A very moving incident took place when we were in Melbourne, Australia, with Baba on his third world tour. Baba had just given an Intensive and had retired to his quarters for the evening. I was doing some work in his Namaste Room, where Baba received people, across the hall. Suddenly, there was a knock on the door, which was Baba's private entrance and was reserved for his use. I went to answer it and found a lovely little Catholic nun. "Is Swami Muktananda here?" she asked sweetly. I explained to her that Baba had already gone in for the evening and was not meeting anyone. She looked crestfallen and said, "Oh please, I've driven seventy miles from the convent to come here, and I don't want to go back without seeing him." I went to find Baba's attendant, Swami Sevananda, and told him the story. Sevananda disappeared into Baba's room.

A few minutes later, Baba came out and told me to show her into his Namaste Room. He sat down in his chair and, with great tenderness, motioned for her to come close to him. The little nun burst into tears and fell at his feet. She explained that she had seen Baba's face on the TV news, and something had happened to her. She began to go into spontaneous meditation and was having a direct experience of the scriptural truths she had studied in her catechism as a young girl. Until now, she had understood them only intellectually. At last, she realized the essence of what they were saying. Baba wiped away her tears and stroked her cheeks with tremendous love. "Babut accha!" he exclaimed softly. "Very good!"

For another woman, Kundalini manifested as wisdom and as the guidance of a strong inner voice. She described it as the voice of God, awakened within her. After this had gone on for some time, she approached a Siddha Yoga swami and told him what she was hearing within. "That's the Bhagavad Gītā!" he said. "It is?" she replied. So she looked in the Bhagavad Gītā, and it was all there. Then one night, during an evening programme in South Fallsburg, someone began to read from Baba's new book, Reflections of the Self, and an astonishing thing began to happen. The voice within her would recite the lines before the speaker had a chance to say them. Always a phrase or two ahead of him, it spoke words that no one had ever heard before.

A word of caution is due here. Before acting on the prompting of an inner voice, we must ask ourselves, "Is this really the voice of the higher Self, or is it the voice of the mind, the voice of desire, the voice of the ego?" To obey an inner voice unquestioningly is often to act out of delusion. We have to use great discrimination and measure the content against the highest teachings of the scriptures. Baba often remarked that the inner voice can be unreliable until a person is fully realized.

Saint Teresa of Avila once wrote about the insight that arises from within:

When in this state of quiet, I, who understand hardly anything that I recite in Latin, particularly in the psalter, have not only been able to understand the text as though it were in Spanish, but have even found to my delight that I can penetrate the meaning of the Spanish.<sup>12</sup>

And she described the intellectual aspect of enlightenment, saying that it was as if a person who was not able to read, and who had never studied, were suddenly to find himself in possession of all the data accumulated by science.

Kalāvati *

In kalāvati, the awakened Kundalini purifies all the thirty-six tattvas, the gross and subtle principles of which the various bodies and sheaths are composed. (See Appendix.) As each of the principles is purified, the seeker automatically detaches himself from it and ceases to identify with it. Finally, the Self alone remains, and he realizes his true identity as Shiva, the Absolute.

In Siddha Yoga, this process may be carried out spontaneously by the awakened Kundalini Shakti, but it can also be used as a practice or a technique of sādhāna. For example, the Vijñāna Bhairava says: "If the yogi contemplates that the progressively subtler principles of his body or of the world are being absorbed into their own respective causes, then the supreme Goddess is finally revealed."<sup>13</sup>

This refers to the technique of vyāpti, or fusion, whereby the gross tattvas are reabsorbed into the subtler ones. The material elements are to be contemplated as being absorbed into the subtle elements (sound, touch, form, taste, and smell), the subtle elements into the mind and the other psychic instruments, and so on, until everything is finally reabsorbed into the Self.

As we have already seen, the negative qualities and the passions are associated with the lower areas of the sūṣmā. As the awakened Kundalini purifies us, these lower qualities tend to disappear and to be replaced by the higher qualities in the upper regions of the central channel. This also pertains to kalāvati, the absorption of the gross into the subtle and more refined. The temptations of the ancient Desert Fathers, their visions of demons and vipers, are a graphic example of this process of inner transformation. And the representation of Saint George slaying the dragon illustrates the triumph of the higher nature over the lower.

The awakened Shakti purifies the different senses. Baba said, "On Her journey to the sahasrāra, Kundalini passes through all the sense organs, purifying them and investing them with new powers. As long as the cakras of the sense organs are not purified, the senses work in an ordinary manner, but when they are purified they acquire divine powers and even the physical senses become sharpened and refined."<sup>14</sup> The eyes gain the power of seeing even distant objects, the ears can hear the inner music, and divine fragrances and nectar are released.

Experiences of kalāvati can be of many varieties. A few years ago we made a pilgrimage to Baba Muktananda's meditation hut at Suki, near the town of Yeola in Maharashtra. This is a tiny hut shaded by two large mango trees next to a sugarcane field, where Baba performed intense austerities and spiritual practices after he received śaktipāt from his Guru, Bhagawan Nityananda. The force of the Shakti is very intense in that hut, and it permeates the surrounding area as well. I sat down beside the hut and rested against one of the walls, intending to meditate for a while. I didn't even have time to close my eyes — a red glow spread out before me, then a brilliant white circle of light appeared within it. These were replaced by an intensely black circle, smaller in size, and finally the shimmering Blue Pearl flashed before me.

These were the lights associated with the four bodies that Baba describes in his spiritual autobiography, Play of Consciousness. The red aura corresponds to the physical body, the white light to the subtle body, the black light to the causal body, and the Blue Pearl to the supra-causal body. Each one progressively dissolves into its subtle cause.

Another variety of kalāvati experience is a vision of the dissolution of all forms into light. During one of Gurumayi's tours in California, a woman approached her in the darśan line and said, "I'm so filled with longing for God that I can't sleep. I wake up every hour all night long. I don't know what to do." Gurumayi took her hand, pulled her close, and looked into her eyes. The woman said, "I felt her gaze enter the deepest part of my being. I opened myself to her and let her in. The hall disappeared; the music and the people were gone. Then I vanished and so did she, and there was nothing but light. Then something shifted, and the world came back." The woman returned to her seat and wept for the remainder of darśan. Her deepest longing had been fulfilled.

Vedhamayī

In vedhamayī, one experiences the piercing of the cakras. This may take a variety of forms — a sensation of intense pressure or vibration at the different centres, or visions of the cakras opening. In meditation, one woman saw herself as a beautiful vine growing on the side of a house. The vine had seven flowers, whose heads were hanging downward. Then a powerful energy began to rise up the vine. Each time it reached a flower, the flower would lift its head, open, and reveal the most extraordinary interior. They were of different colours — red, yellow, white, and purple. When the energy rose to the topmost flower, the largest of all, it lifted its head to reveal a magnificent thousand-petalled lotus radiating golden light.

Another woman said that one day Baba Muktananda hit her on the back several times very hard when she went up to him in the darśan line. She went to her room to lie down, and she felt tremendous warmth suffusing her spinal column. A friend told her that her spine was beet red and very hot to the touch. A few hours later the woman had a vision. She saw herself inside a fire station, and there was a fireman's pole extending up through seven storeys. At the bottom there were two snakes that began winding their way up. The snakes pushed through each storey until they finally reached the top of the pole.

One of the most significant centres is the anābhata cakra at the heart. Baba Muktananda says: "When Kundalini reaches this level, the heart opens, and wave upon wave of bliss keeps arising within. There is a beautiful light in the heart, which one sees in meditation. Moreover, there is a centre of pure knowledge there, and when Kundalini begins to work in the heart, knowledge arises in you spontaneously. Different powers such as clairaudience, clairvoyance, and the power of healing come automatically."<sup>15</sup>

In many instances of śaktipāt, there is a dramatic opening of the heart and one is overcome by powerful waves of divine love, a love that is pure and uncontaminated by the passions of the lower centres. Baba also said that when the heart opens, one begins to experience the different inner worlds. These can be truly astonishing — cities of light, of gold, of crystal, where the inner experience is one of ecstasy, or lower realms inhabited by curious beings half human and half animal.

A woman who was staying in Gurudev Siddha Peeth said that one day she was lying in bed looking at a photograph of Gurumayi. All of a sudden a blue light, a star, appeared, and it grew bigger and bigger. It came towards her and enveloped her. The next thing she knew, she was flying through the air at a speed of thousands of miles an hour. Suddenly, she landed in a realm that was entirely blue. She knew there were objects there, but she could not distinguish them. All she could see was blue light. Then a blue being approached her and said, "This is where you will come one day. But first you must repeat this mantra." He gave her a mantra, which she began to repeat. As she did this, the blue star once again carried her back to her bed at the same incredible speed. But before she knew what was happening, the blue star returned and took her away again, this time even faster. She landed in the same place, and the blue being appeared once more. He said, "I told you to repeat the mantra." So she began repeating it very intensely, over and over. Her experience in that world was one of ecstasy, she said, but she had the distinct sense that she was not yet strong enough to contain the energy there, which was overwhelming. A moment later, she went flying back through the cosmos and landed on her bed, with the mantra repeating itself inside her.

As Kundalini rises up to the higher centres, a seeker experiences visions of light in various forms, such as the moon, the sun, stars, fire, lightning, and flame. Much of the scriptural literature on Kundalini has to do with Her manifestation in the form of inner light.

Jnaneshwar Maharaj says: "She is like a ring of lightning, folds of flaming fire, or a bar of pure gold.... When She is awakened, She breaks Her bonds like a star shooting through space, like the sun falling from its place in the sky, or a point of light bursting forth like a sprouting seed."<sup>16</sup>

Gurumayi once said:

Have you ever seen the fireworks that are called sparklers? They take one that is already lit to light one that is unlit, and then use the newly lit one to light another. And then one more, one more, one more. Then you have all these stars!

There are cakras, spiritual centres, within the subtle system that are described as lotuses. When you repeat the mantra, you experience the stars in each of these centres. The mantra takes you from one star to another, from the second to the third, from the third to the fourth. And in this way, the entire body is illumined with the light of Consciousness; the entire body radiates light.

Many people want to know how they can create a body of light so that they can move very easily. For this, repeat the mantra. It will take you from one star to the next until it reaches the top of the head, which is called the sahasrāra. When all those stars finally hit that one big light, there is nothing but light!<sup>17</sup>

The inner divine sounds, or nāda, are also associated with vedhamayī. They are categorized into ten varieties: the humming of bees, the roar of the ocean, the ringing of bells, the sound of the conch, the vīnā (a stringed instrument), cymbals, the flute, the mṛdaṅg (a drum), the kettledrum, and the sound of thunder. Most of these originate in the heart cakra, but the megha nāda, thunder, resounds in the sahasrāra. The mind becomes overpowered, loses consciousness, merges into the sound or light, and ultimately into the Self. For this reason, vedhamayī also pertains to laya yoga.

Siddha Yoga is called mahā yoga, the great yoga, because it encompasses all these other independent yogas. In the words of Baba Muktananda: "Just as a seed contains a whole tree in potential form, Kundalini contains all the different forms of yoga, and when She is awokened through the grace of the Guru, She makes all yogas take place within you spontaneously.... You don't have to make any effort to practise them; they come to you on their own."<sup>18</sup>

Notes to Chapter 6

- 1 Swami Muktananda, Kundalini, The Secret of Life, 3rd edition (Delhi : UBSPD, (1995), p. 22.
- 2 Swami Vishnu Tirtha Maharaj, Śaktipāt — Kundalinī Mahāyoga (Sanskrit/Hindi edition, Devas, Madhya Pradesh: Shri Sadhan Granthamala Prakashan Samiti Narayana Kuti, Sannyas Ashram) 4:30-31.
- 3 Parātrimiśika Vivarana.
- 4 Swami Muktananda, "A Million Times Brighter Than the Sun," Darshan magazine 41/42 (1990), p. 60.
- 5 Rg Veda 1.8:3.
- 6 Śaktipāt — Kundalinī Mahāyoga, 2.16.
See also, by the same author, Devāltmā Śakti (1968 edition; Rishikesh: Muni Ki Rati, 1948), pp. 79-100.
- 7 Mahābhāṣaṇijāṭi 55.
- 8 Darshan magazine 41/42, p. 79.
- 9 Pratyabhijñābrdayam 17.
- 10 Swami Muktananda, From the Finite to the Infinite (New York: SYDA Foundation, 1989), vol 1, p. 84.

- 11 Swami Muktananda, Play of Consciousness, translated by Swami Chidvilasananda (Ganeshpuri : Gurudev Siddha Peeth, 1995), p. 23.
- 12 The Life of Teresa of Jesus, translated and edited by E. Allison Peers (Garden City, New York: Image Books, 1960), p. 158.
- 13 Vijnana Bhairava dharana 31.
- 14 Kundalini, The Secret of Life, p. 38.
- 15 Ibid., p. 32.
- 16 Swamini Jnaneshwar's Gita, rendered by Swami Kripananda (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1989) 6:224, 226.
- 17 Swami Chidvilasananda, "Creating a Body of Light," Darshan magazine 41/42 (1990), p. 168.
- 18 Kundalini, The Secret of Life, p. 18.

The deities residing in the cakras tremble when the prāṇa moves through the suṣumnā, and the great Goddess Kundalini is absorbed in Mount Kailāsa in the sabasrāra.

— Śiva Samhitā 4:26

CHAPTER 7

THE CHAKRAS :

Lotuses of Light

The poet-saint Kabir said:

Within this earthen vessel are bowers and groves,

And within it is the Creator.

Within this vessel are the seven oceans and the unnumbered stars.

The touchstone and the jewel appraiser are within;
And within this vessel the Eternal soundeth, and the spring wells up.

Kabir says:

Listen to me, my friend!

My beloved Lord is within.'

Kabir had discovered through his own direct personal experience the scriptural truth that all the principles of creation exist right within us. Our bodies and the universe are composed of the same principles. For this reason, the scriptures talk about the identity of the brahmāṇḍa, the macrocosm, and the pīṇḍāṇḍa, the microcosm or human body.

We have already seen that, just as the Absolute descends through its manifestations from the subtle to the gross in the outer world, it does the same thing in our own bodies. On the individual level, the Supreme descends from the sahasrāra at the crown of the head and manifests as the various creative principles, or tattvas, from the subtle to the gross, in the six cakras within the susumna nādī. Each tattva has its own centre of activity within the body, from which energy is radiated into the system. These centres are called cakras, and they are junction points where nādīs converge like the spokes of a wheel inside the susumna. The prāṇa is diffused from the cakras throughout the entire system through the complex web of nādīs.

These subtle centres vitalize and control the various organs, nerves, and plexi of the physical body in the regions surrounding each cakra. The cakras are extremely subtle centres of vital energy. The nerve plexi and organs which correspond to them in the physical body are built up by their coarsened vibrations. Because the cakras and the nādīs belong to the subtle body, they cannot be seen with the physical eyes. They exist only as long as the body is alive and disappear when the life force leaves the body.

One morning while I was sitting for meditation, I suddenly felt all the vitality in my body withdraw itself from my limbs and gather in the centre of my body. It rose up through the central channel and exited through the crown of my head, taking my full awareness intact along with it. I felt that I was formless consciousness, completely independent of my physical body, which I could observe from a few feet away. There was nothing frightening about it — I was still "me" as I knew myself, but without a body. Then, just as suddenly, I returned to my body, re-entering it through the crown of the head. As the vital force descended through the susumna, it shot out into all my limbs through an infinite number of tiny channels, revitalizing them once more. The subtle body again interpenetrated and enlivened the physical body.

I now understood what happens at the moment of physical death, and that what we truly are in essence survives the death of the body without any break in consciousness. It answered the questions I had had for years regarding the survival of the soul after death.

The cakras are often referred to as lotuses with varying numbers of petals. The petals are formed by the configurations of the nādīs, which surround and pass through the cakras. Each nādī has its own particular rate of vibration, and each vibrational level produces a specific sound. The sound produced by the vibrations of the nādīs is represented by the corresponding Sanskrit letters, which appear on the petals of the lotuses.

Because each letter of the Sanskrit alphabet is a separate power and a particular aspect of God, it is considered a devatā, or deity. The letters on the petals are therefore termed the surrounding deities of the principal deity or governor of the cakra, and a cakra has as many of these subsidiary deities as it has petals.

The sages discovered that, by repeating these syllables, they could affect the corresponding nādīs and cakras and could bring about highly predictable results. In this way, they learned how to develop certain siddhis, or supernormal powers, such as the ability to levitate, to reduce the body to the size of an atom, to expand it to any size, and so on. Baba strongly discouraged people from trying to cultivate supernormal powers. They are obvious ego traps; they distract us from our highest purpose and they siphon off our energy at lower levels. He used to say that the only siddhi worth attaining was the mahā or great siddhi, the state of absorption in God.

Far more importantly, the sages also discovered particular Sanskrit syllables, or combinations of syllables (among which are Rāma, Kriṣṇa, and Namah Śivāya), which create within the central channel, the sūṣumnā nādī, powerful vibrations capable of awakening Kundalini. Since Kundalini awakening eventually culminates in God-realization, these syllables came to be called the Names of God.<sup>2</sup>

With regard to the siddhis, an Indian scholar says:

We can meet with several persons every day elbowing us in the streets or bazaars who in all sincerity attempted to reach the highest plane of bliss, but fell victim on the way to the illusions of the psychic world, and stopped at one or the other of the six cakras. They are of varying degrees of attainment and are seen to possess some power which is not found even in the best intellectuals of the ordinary run of mankind. That this school of practical psychology was working very well in India at one time is evident from these living instances (not to speak of the numberless treatises on the subject) of men roaming about in all parts of the country.<sup>3</sup>

Each cakra, with the exception of the sahasrāra, has a bija mantra, or seed letter, which represents the subtle sound produced by the vibration of the forces of that particular cakra. The seed letter expresses the essential nature of the cakra. As we have seen, the five lower cakras are the bodily centres for the tattvas of the five material elements: earth, water, fire, air, and ether. Each cakra is represented by the seed letter which corresponds to its specific element. The sixth cakra, ājñā, is represented by the sacred syllable Om. The seed letters are the audible forms of the principles of creation, and they are the "natural name" of the element associated with that cakra. The element springs from its seed mantra, or natural name, and also eventually re-enters it. If a person utters with creative force the natural name of anything, he brings that thing into existence.

For instance, ram is the seed mantra or natural name of fire in the manipūra cakra at the navel. So the mantra ram is the sound audible to the physical ears of the forces constituting fire. The same thing is true of the other seed mantras in the other cakras: lam in mūlādhāra at the base of the spine — earth; vam in svādhiṣṭhāna in the sacral area — water; yam in anāhata at the heart — air; and ham in viśuddha at the throat — ether. However, merely repeating ram will not produce fire. The mantra has to be awakened and made caitanya, or conscious, for it to work. Otherwise, the scriptures explain, one repeats it at the layer of the outer husk; it must be enlivened at its core, and then repeated with creative force.

The elements of the cakras are also associated with the various senses and their corresponding tattvas: the powers of sense perception (smell, taste, sight, touch, and hearing), the powers of action (locomotion, grasping or handling, excretion, reproduction and sexual enjoyment, and speaking), and the subtle elements of perception (which, when they reach the gross level of manifestation, will form the objects of the senses — odour, taste, form and colour, touch, and sound).

When a seeker practises kundalini yoga without the grace of a Siddha Guru, he must propitiate each of the deities residing in each of the cakras. The Tantras describe the specific forms of worship required by each of the hundreds of deities before Kundalini can rise — a very time-consuming process indeed!*

* For instance, a particular meditation on Dakini says: "Meditate on her, the red, the red-eyed Dakini, in the mūlādhāra cakra, who strikes terror into the hearts of bound souls, who holds in her two right hands a spear and a staff surmounted by a skull, and in her two left hands a sword and a cup. She is fierce of temper and shows her ferocious teeth. She crushes the whole host of enemies. She is plump of body and is fond of rice pudding. It is thus that she should be meditated upon by those who desire immortality".

The Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpāṇa ("An Investigation of the Six Cakras") is a Sanskrit text composed in the 16th century by the great Master Purnananda Swami. The commentary, written by Kalicharana, begins with these words: "He alone who has become acquainted with the wealth of the six lotuses by mabā yoga is able to explain the inner principles thereof. Not even the most excellent among the wise, nor the oldest in experience, is able, without the mercy of the Guru, to explain the inner principles relating to the six cakras.<sup>5</sup>

The six principal deities of the cakras, in ascending order, are: Brahma, Vishnu, Rudra, Isha, Sadashiva, and Shambhu. They govern the six corresponding planes or realms: bhūrloka (the earth), bhūvarloka (the plane of the ancestors), svarloka (the celestial realm), and maharloka, janaloka, and tapaloka, which are planes of highly evolved beings. The sahasrāra corresponds to satyaloka, the realm of pure Consciousness, the abode of supreme Shiva. In this way the cakras are related to the various planes of the macrocosm, which may be experienced in meditation as Kundalini pierces the cakras corresponding to them.

Along with their deities, the cakras have their own particular śaktis, which represent the various dhātus, or bodily substances: skin, blood, flesh, fat, bone, and marrow. These śaktis are sometimes called the Queens of the cakras or their doorkeepers.

The petals of the lotuses hang downward except when Kundalini passes through them. As the nādīs are filled with the radiant Shakti, the lotuses appear to turn upward and bloom with light.

A number of scriptures in the Kundalini tradition<sup>6</sup> list various qualities that are associated with the different cakras. They explain that there exists a connection between the particular qualities and the operation of the energies of the cakra to which the qualities are assigned. They also state that those qualities tend to disappear when Kundalini rises through the corresponding cakra. In this way, the undesirable negative qualities associated with the lower cakras vanish in a person who raises Kundalini above them. As one reaches the higher centres, the qualities become increasingly good.

There are three "male" Shiva lingams, symbols of Shiva, one located in the mūlādhāra cakra at the base of the spine, one in the anāhata cakra at the heart, and the third in the ājñā cakra at the space between the eyebrows. They are set in "female" (apex down) triangles, which are seats of Shakti. These are the locations of the three granthis, or knots, where the force of māyā is said to be exceptionally strong.

Mūlādhāra Cakra

The mūlādhāra cakra lies at the root of the sūṣumnā nādī at the base of the spine, where Kundalini lies dormant. Mūla means "root," and adhāra is "support." The three principal nādīs — īdā, piṅgalā, and sūṣumnā — are also known as Ganga, Yamuna, and Saraswati, respectively, named after three sacred rivers. Because they converge here at the mūlādhāra cakra, this place is called yukta-trivenī. The Sanskrit word trivenī means the place of confluence of these three rivers, and yukta means "yoked or joined"; it can also mean "auspicious."

The sun, moon, and fire are frequent images in the scriptures on Kundalini, because these are the most common forms the Great Light takes when it descends into the realm of matter. We are all very familiar with these outer manifestations of light, but we are not so well acquainted with their inner counterparts. Usually, these three forms of light are grouped according to their degree of subtlety. Each one is associated with one of the three guṇas, the basic qualities of nature that determine the inherent characteristics of all created things. Fire is the grossest of the three and is associated with tamoguṇa, the impure quality. The sun is subtler and represents rajoguṇa, which is both pure and impure. The moon, which is cooling and white, is regarded as the subtlest form of light and is connected with sattva guṇa, the quality of goodness and purity.

The īdā nāḍī on the left of the suṣumnā is called the moon nāḍī. It is cooling and of a pale silvery colour. Piṅgalā, on the right, is the sun nāḍī. It is heating and has the lustre of the filaments of the pomegranate flower. The suṣumnā is the central channel and is fiery. The suṣumnā is actually composed of a number of layers or concentric circles, which are also considered nāḍīs. The outermost layer is the suṣumnā, representing fire and tamoguṇa. Within it is the vajra nāḍī, associated with the sun and rajoguṇa, and within that is the citrīṇī nāḍī, related to the moon and sattva guṇa. Citrīṇī is said to be as subtle as a spider's thread. The space within citrīṇī is called the brahma nāḍī, the "channel of the Absolute," and it is the pathway of the awakened Kundalini.

All the nāḍīs originate in the kāṇḍa, a Sanskrit word meaning "bulb." It is located between the anus and the reproductive organ and is shaped like a bird's egg.

The mūlādhāra cakra has four petals, whose qualities are four forms of bliss, since this centre is the "source of a massive pleasurable sensation." On these petals, which are crimson, are the golden letters vāmī, śāmī, śāmī, and sāmī. The letters begin at the top and go in a clockwise direction around the petals.

This is the centre of the densest sattva, earth, to which the Tantras assign the colour yellow. The square is the mandala, geometric form, of the earth principle, and it is surrounded by eight spears directed towards the eight points of the compass.

The seed letter of earth is lāñi, which is shown seated on the elephant Airavata, the vehicle of Indra, the Vedic lord of the celestial beings. The elephant symbolizes the strength and solidity of the earth. The seed letters are personified in order to aid in their visualization. They are represented with various numbers of arms and are mounted on vehicles. Earth has the property of cohesion and stimulates the sense of smell, so the power of smelling (ghrāñendriya) is associated with this centre, along with smell-as-such (gandha tanmātra), and the power of locomotion (pādendriya).<sup>7</sup>

The deity of this cakra is the creator, Brahma, with four faces, so creativity is also connected with this centre. Many of the scriptures cite this cakra as the location of parā, the supreme or subtlest state of sound which, as vibration, gives rise to the entire universe.

The deities of all the cakras actually reside in the bindu, or dot, above the seed letter, but for want of space, they have been pictured outside. Along with the devatā there is always a devī, in this case the Shakti Dakini, representing the dhātu of skin. She serves as the keeper of the door, the brahmā-dvara, or entrance to the sūṣumna. All of the devatās and devīs are shown making the gestures of dispelling fear (abbaya mudrā) and granting boons (varada mudrā).

In the centre of the cakra there is the lightning-like traipura triangle, the seat of Shakti, within which is set the svayambhu lingam. The Sanskrit word svayambhu means "self-originated" or "self-existent," and it is one of the names of Brahma. This lingam is described as beautiful like molten gold and of the shape and colour of a new leaf. This is the location of the Brahmā granthi, the first of the three knots that must be severed. Sometimes a sensation of pulling or contraction takes place in this region, and one may feel the prāṇa leaving the īdā and pingalā nādīs and entering the sūṣumnā.

Around the lingam the sleeping Kundalini is coiled three and a half times, covering with Her mouth the entrance to the sūṣumnā. The Sat Cakra Nirūpana describes Her as follows:

Over the lingam shines the sleeping Kundalini, fine as the fibre of the lotus stalk. She is the world-bewilderer, gently covering the mouth of the brahmā-dvāra with Her own. Like the spiral of the conch shell, Her shining snake-like form goes three and a half times around Shiva, and Her lustre is like that of a strong flash of young lightning. Her sweet murmur is like the indistinct hum of swarms of love-mad bees. She produces melodious poetry and all other compositions in prose or verse in Sanskrit and other languages. It is She who maintains all the beings in the world by means of the inhalation and exhalation, and shines in the cavity of the root lotus like a chain of brilliant lights.*

One day in a meditation vision, a woman found herself struggling on her hands and knees down through a narrow cavern. At the bottom she discovered a small serpent, coiled in a prism of water, surrounded by brilliant light. The woman knew that the serpent had been patiently waiting for her to come and kneel at her shrine. As she knelt, the serpent became vast and bit her; then the woman discovered that she had within her all power and all wisdom.

Gurumayi once said that people speak of Kundalini as moving in a column from the base of the spine to the crown of the head, and they try to grasp Her in this way. But in the realm of Kundalini, nothing is dense. All Her colours are translucent.

Gurumayi said:

Picture Kundalini as a rainbow. She softly glistens in the form of an arch, across the inner sky. A rainbow is not fixed. It arches across the sky like a bow, and yet it is more than a bow or an arch. It is the visible half of a vast circle. The other half is obscured by the earth. Think of the movement of the awakened Kundalini in this way. She is a vast spinning circle of brilliant colours. She cannot be confined. Reality in the world of Kundalini is dazzling.<sup>9</sup>

Svādbiṣṭhāna Cakra

This is the second cakra, in ascending order, and is the spinal centre of the region at the root of the reproductive organ. Its name means "own abode" of the Shakti. It is a vermillion lotus of six petals, which bear the lightning-coloured letters bañi, bhañi, mañi, yañi, rañi, and lañi.

This is the centre of the water tattva, which is represented by a white inner lotus of eight petals with a crescent moon, the mandala of the water principle, in the centre. This is the white region of Varuna, the Vedic god of the sea. The seed letter of water is vani, stainless and white as the autumnal moon, which is represented as seated on its vehicle, a white makara. The makara is an animal similar to an alligator, which is the emblem of the waters and the vehicle of Varuna.

Water stimulates the sense of taste, so the power of tasting (rasanendriya) is connected with this cakra, along with taste-as-such (rasa tanmātra), and the power of grasping or handling (bastendriya).

In the bindu of vani is Vishnu, the deity of the cakra, seated on his vehicle, Garuda, the king of the birds. The devī is the Śakti Rakini, representing the bodily substance of blood, whose mind is exalted with the drinking of ambrosia, the nectar which flows from the sabasrāra. She is exalted with the divine energy that infuses her. She is described as being of furious aspect. Her three eyes are red, and her teeth show fiercely.

The svādhiṣṭhāna cakra is concerned with the excitation of sexual feelings and is associated with the qualities of credulity, suspicion, disdain, delusion, false knowledge, and pitilessness. Each of the six petals of the lotus is associated with one of these particular vrittis, or qualities.

When Kundalini yoga is practised without the grace of a Siddha Guru, it involves intense concentration on the individual cakras. This is why so much emphasis is placed on the seeker's purity, self-control, and benevolence. If a seeker has these qualities, it is possible that concentration on the lower centres associated with the passions may quiet them instead of rousing them. On the other hand, if an individual lacks these qualities, his practice may bring about undesirable results.<sup>10</sup>

Gurumayi once said:

When Kundalini rises to this cakra and begins to purify it, all sorts of things come up. If a seeker is upheld and sustained by the practices of yoga, then these negative qualities will be purified gradually and expelled from his system. When you truly believe in the Guru's grace, when you genuinely love and honour Kundalini, then the awakened energy stays under control.

Throughout the ages, the knowers of the Truth have warned seekers not to try to awaken Kundalini on their own. They have pointed out the risks of forcing Kundalini awake through strenuous austerities or radical forms of prāṇāyāma. The grace of an enlightened Master is crucial.

BRAHMA
Bhur-loka (Earth)
Skin

Mūlādhāra Cakra

VISHNU
(Bhuvar-lok (Ancestors)
Blood

Svādhiṣṭhāna Cakra

AUDRA
Svar-lok (celestial) Flesh

Maṇipūra Cakra

ISHA
Mahar-lok Fat

Anāhata Cakra

SADSHIN
Jang-lok Bone

Viśuddha Cakra

SHAMBHU
Tapa-lok
Marrow

Ājñā Cakra

Supreme Shiu
Satya-lok

Sahasrāra

A-ka-tha triangle

Heaven and hell are in the body. When you get caught up in the six enemies, you are living in hell. But this region only poses a problem for those who want to keep indulging in it. If you care for the Shakti, if you honour and conserve it, then the lotus of svādbisṭhāna won't trap you. You can live in this very body as if it were heaven."

The scriptures say that a person who successfully meditates on this lotus is freed from the enemies of man, the six passions. Moreover, "He becomes a lord among yogis and is like the sun, illumining the dense darkness of ignorance."<sup>12</sup>

Manipūra Cakra

Manipūra is the third cakra, in ascending order, and is located within the suṣumnā at the level of the navel. It is called manipūra because it is as lustrous as a gem (mani). It owes its radiance to the fact that it is the centre of the fire tattva. This lotus is described as having the colour of heavy-laden rain clouds; and it has ten petals on which are the letters dām, dbām, nām, tām, tbām, dam, dbam, nam, pmān, and phām.

The mandala of the red region of fire is the triangle, located in the centre of the lotus. There is an auspicious swastika on each of its three sides, representing eternity. The seed letter of fire is ram, as radiant as the rising sun, which is represented as seated on a ram. The ram is the vehicle of Agni, the Vedic lord of fire.

The element of fire has the properties of expansion, producing heat, and stimulating the sight-sense of colour and form, so the power of seeing (cakṣurindriya) and colour-as-such (rūpa tanmātra) are associated with this centre, as well as the power of excretion (pāyvīndriya).

The deity of this cakra is Rudra, whose function is the dissolution of the world. Just as fire consumes everything, so Rudra dissolves everything within himself. He is red but appears to be white because of the ashes he smears on his body. The devī of this centre is the Shakti Lakini, representing flesh. Like all the other devīs, her mind is exalted from drinking the nectar that flows through the sūṣumna from the sabasrāra. It is said that concentration on this centre may satisfy the appetites of this devī.

The qualities associated with the petals of this lotus are shame, treachery, jealousy, desire, inertia, sadness, worldliness, ignorance, aversion, and fear. The qualities of this lower centre are all still negative. Not until we reach the heart cakra do we find a mixture of both positive and negative traits. However, if a yogi successfully meditates on this navel lotus, he acquires the power to destroy and create the world.<sup>13</sup>

Gurumayi once said:

Allow the awakened Kundalini to convert your lower tendencies into virtues. It is not enough to have a sublime experience in meditation, if all you do is say, "Wow!" — and then go on with your life in a way that contradicts the purity of that experience. With the grace of the awakened Kundalini, you can meditate on these lower cakras and transform their qualities into virtues. This is how the darkness of māyā is destroyed.<sup>14</sup>

So at manipūra, for instance, shame can be transformed into honour, treachery into loyalty, sadness into joy, and so on. One of the qualities that is purified at this cakra is fear. One man, shortly after he received śaktipāt, found that the region around his navel began to vibrate with great intensity. Then he experienced spontaneous bhastrikā prāṇāyāma, the bellows breathing.

Suddenly, a ball of white light entered his navel and exploded. He began to feel completely grounded, and his mind became still. He was filled with a sense of power and fearlessness. Over the next few days the experience remained with him, and he could feel the Shakti emanating from the centre at his navel and streaming into his arms and legs.

The element of fire in the manipūra cakra can be experienced in several different ways. When this centre is not purified, its fire can scorch us in craving and desire for worldly pleasure. But when the Kundalini Shakti is awakened and this cakra is being purified, that fire becomes the fire of purification in which all our negative qualities are burned. The scriptures say that we can actually offer these qualities to the divine fire within us:

Into the Fire of Consciousness in the manipūra cakra, kindled with knowledge,
I offer the actions of the senses, with the mind as sacrificial ladle, svāhā!
I offer the senses into the Fire of the Self, fuelled by righteousness and unrighteousness
as the clarified butter, with the mind as the ladle, held by the handle that is the path of suṣumnā, svāhā!
I offer all actions, both good and evil, into the all-pervading Fire, fed by Time.
The two hands with which I hold the ladle are Shiva and Shakti.
I offer as oblation this universe of thirty-six principles, into the Fire of Consciousness, which even without fuel, is constantly burning within.
Though it is obscured by the darkness of māyā, it emits rays of wondrous purifying light, *svāhā!**

Not long after I received śaktipāt, I had an experience in meditation in which I was driving up Highway 101 in California between San Jose and San Francisco. The freeway signs were familiar: Palo Alto, Menlo Park, Burlingame. Then suddenly another sign loomed ahead — Death. And I calmly recognized that that was the exit I had to take — the death of the limited ego. I turned off at the junction and soon found myself on a dirt track in the country. Ahead of me was a blazing fire that extended clear across the track from one side to the other. I would have to go through it; there was no way around it. As I drove into the fire and was enveloped by flames, I came out of meditation. For years after that, whenever I was going through a particularly intense phase of purification, I would have a vision of being surrounded by those flames, and I knew it was the fire of the awakened Kundalini at work, burning up my impurities.

After taking an Intensive, also, I would invariably wake up the next morning to see my bed surrounded by flames. This vision was never frightening; I always understood what it meant and knew it was a great blessing.

On the physical level, the element of fire at the manipūra cakra is associated with the digestive fire. Lord Krishna tells Arjuna: "Having become the vaiśvānara fire, I abide in the body of all living beings and, associated with the prāṇa and apāna, digest the four kinds of food."<sup>16</sup>

Jnaneshwar Maharaj comments on this verse, saying:

I have lit a fire around the navel of each living being,
and I am that fire in the belly.

Fanning this fire with the bellows of the incoming and outgoing breaths, great quantities of food can be consumed in the belly day and night.

Whether food is dry or juicy, well cooked or burned, I digest the four kinds of food.

In this way I am all creatures, the life which supports them, and the inner fire which is the chief means of life!<sup>17</sup>

Anāhata Cakra

The heart cakra is of the colour of the red bandhuka flower and has twelve petals. The vermillion-coloured letters on its petals are kāmī, khāmī, gāmī, ghāmī, nāmī, chāmī, chhāmī, jāmī, jhāmī, ñāmī, ṭāmī, and ṭhāmī. This is where the sages hear the mystical anāhata-śabda, the unstruck sound, from which the cakra derives its name. It emanates without any contact between two objects. It is the śabda brahman, the Absolute in the form of sound.

We have already mentioned the ten grades of nāda, the divine sounds one begins to hear when the heart centre opens. Baba said, "At the stage when he hears the nāda, the yogi discovers an ability to dance. I would sometimes go at night to the top of a hill and dance for hours on end. What a wonderful divine feeling it was!"<sup>18</sup>

It is said that the anāhata cakra is like the celestial wish-fulfilling tree, granting whatever the supplicant asks; but it bestows even more, since it leads him to liberation.<sup>19</sup> This cakra is also the dwelling place of the individual soul in the form of a flame. The soul resembles the steady, tapering flame of a lamp in a place where there is no wind because it is unaffected by worldly activity, just as the flame is undisturbed by the wind.

Baba Muktananda often described the flame of the soul. He said: "Within the heart is a space the size of a thumb, and here a divine light shimmers. The sages have spent their lives looking at this light. How marvellous is the heart centre! How magnificent is the light in the heart space! How divine is the Goddess Kundalini! As She unfolds, man's entire being is transformed."<sup>20</sup>

The individual soul is called haṁsaḥ, a word rich in meaning. These two syllables represent Shiva and Shakti. Haṁ is Shiva, the puruṣa or experiencing subject, the bindu, the point into which everything is absorbed, the inbreath. Sah is Shakti, prakrti or primordial nature, visarga (emanation or creation), the outgoing breath. Hanisah is the union of these two opposites, of male and female. Hanisah also means "swan" in Sanskrit, hence the frequent representation of the soul as a swan.

Shankaracharya says: "I worship in the anāhata cakra that unique pair of swans who are Han and Sah, swimming in the minds of great beings, who subsist entirely on the honey of the full-blown lotus of knowledge. By meditating on them, the seeker acquires knowledge of all the eighteen sciences and is able to extract the good from the bad, just as the swan separates milk from water."<sup>21</sup>

The swan is said to have the ability to separate milk from water, so it is a symbol of discrimination. In the same way, a wise person can discern good from evil, right from wrong, the permanent from the impermanent.

The anāhata cakra is the centre of the air tattva, represented by the hexagonal mandala composed of two interlacing triangles. The mandala is the colour of smoke, which emanates from the flame of the soul. The seed letter of air is yam, and it is seated on a black antelope, which is noted for its fleetness. It is the vehicle of Vayu, the Vedic lord of the wind, with its property of motion. Because the element of air has this characteristic of movement, it stimulates the sense of touch, so the power of feeling by touch (sparsendriya) and touch-as-such (sparsa tanmātra) are connected with this centre, together with the power of reproduction and sexual enjoyment (upasthendriya).

Located within the seed letter is Isha, the deity who oversees the first three cakras. Since he is a form of Shiva, he is depicted with three eyes, the third being the Eye of Wisdom, the fully opened ājñā cakra at the space between the eyebrows. He is described as "the beautiful One possessed of the soft radiance of ten million moons, and shining with the radiance of his matted hair." The Shakti of this centre is Kakini, associated with the bodily substance of fat.

The golden bāṇa lingam, representing Shiva, is placed within an inverted triangle, denoting Shakti, "whose tender body is like ten million flashes of lightning." This is the site of the Viṣṇu granthi, the second of the three knots, the knot of the heart. This is also the region of the sun, whose rays tinge the filaments surrounding the lotus.

The Siva Samitī says: "In the anāhata cakra there is the bāṇa lingam and a beautiful flame. By contemplating it, a yogi attains wealth from both the visible and invisible realms."<sup>22</sup>

Whereas the qualities of the lower cakras are all negative, those of the anāhata cakra are mixed. Along with anxiety, the sense of mineness, arrogance, languor, conceit, covetousness, duplicity, indecision, and regret, we also find hope, endeavour, and discrimination.

Below the pericarp of this chakra is a small red, eight-petalled lotus known as ānanda-kānda. This is where mental worship on one's chosen deity should be performed. It is visualized as containing the wish-fulfilling tree with a jewelled altar beneath it, and the seat of the patron deity under a beautiful awning, surrounded by trees laden with flowers and fruit and sweet-voiced birds.

One woman had a vision of her heart as a desert, a dry and barren land. When she received śaktipāt, however, she was filled with love and began to weep. She saw her tears falling like rain on the desert, and they made it green and fertile. Sometimes our lives may feel like a desert, arid and meaningless. But the Shakti is the energy of enthusiasm, of greatness, of joy, and She stirs the heart of every creature. When She awakens within us, our lives take on profound significance.

The opening of the heart can come when one least expects it. I went to Gurudev Siddha Peeth to meet Baba Muktananda in 1973. It was July and the middle of the monsoon. On the third day after my arrival, I was assigned the seva (selfless service to the Ashram) of sweeping up the leaves in the lower garden, which actually amounted to picking them up by hand, one by one, out of the mud. At one point that afternoon, I glanced up and noticed that Baba and a small group of men were walking down the path toward me. Baba was making his daily rounds of the garden.

I stopped for a few minutes to watch him striding briskly along. Suddenly, he reached up and picked a leaf off one of the eucalyptus trees that lined the garden path in those days. He put the leaf in his mouth and began to chew it. Then he took it out of his mouth, blew on it, and began to chew it again. "How peculiar," I thought. He kept doing this — chewing on the leaf, then taking it out of his mouth and blowing on it. Abruptly, he turned off the path, walked over to me, took the leaf out of his mouth, and handed it to me without saying a word. Then he walked on. I was dumbstruck! I managed to stammer, "Thank you, Baba!" I was flattered at his attention, but I had no idea what the gesture had meant, or why he had done such a strange thing.

Later on, I came to understand that Baba had infused that leaf with his Shakti, his spiritual power, and to this day I've kept the leaf preserved among my most precious treasures.

It was time for a chant in the temple, and I went in a few minutes early just to sit quietly. I was still holding the leaf. Almost immediately, there was a tremendous crash right above the top of my head. It sounded like an aeroplane breaking through the sound barrier. Simultaneously, an explosion took place in my chest, as if dynamite had blasted open a granite boulder. Intense waves of love began to course through me, and I burst into tears.

I cried for two weeks — which was about the length of time it took me to adjust to my new condition, for it didn't go away; those waves of love kept washing over me, within me, through me. They made all the love I had felt before that time seem like a pale, weak relative of what I was now experiencing. This new love was far more intense, totally pure, and unconditional.

I remembered the Spanish mystics whose works I had read in graduate school. At the time I had been unable to relate to them at all. But now they flashed vividly before my mind. "This is what they were talking about," I thought. "This is divine love. My God — it's real!"

Those intense waves of love kept surging through me, twenty-four hours a day, uninterruptedly, for about a year and a half; then they became sporadic. During that time, I slept very little. I didn't want to sleep, to become unconscious, unaware of that love. I would lie awake in the dormitory, staring into the velvety blackness of the tropical night, savouring that indescribable experience that had been so freely given to me.

Baba once said, "As you meditate more and more, your heart will begin to overflow with love. You will get into a state in which you laugh like one who is mad. I am not telling you to become mad; I am only telling you that love and happiness should come forth spontaneously from inside you. God is joy."<sup>23</sup>

The great Sufi poet-saint, Jalaluddin Rumi, wrote so beautifully and with such intensity of the experience of divine love. He said that ecstatic love is an ocean, and that the Milky Way is just a flake of foam floating on it.

Viśuddha Cakra

This is the fifth cakra and it is located in the throat. The scriptures say that because the individual soul attains purity by seeing the Self in the heart, this cakra is called viśuddha (pure). It is of a smoky purple hue, and its sixteen petals bear the crimson-coloured vowels: am, ām, im, īm, um, ūm, rim, īrim, lrim, līrim, em, ām, om, aum, ām (the inbreath — bindu and Shiva), and ah (the outbreak — visarga and Shakti). The vowels are visible to one whose intellect has been purified through yogic practice. There are no psychological qualities associated with these petals. Instead, there are seven subtle tones, certain bija mantras; in the eighth petal there is venom, and in the sixteenth there is nectar, which represent the destructive and upbuilding forces of the world.

This is the centre of the ether tattva, which is represented by a white circle, the mandala of the ether principle. The seed letter of ether is ham. It is white, clothed in space, and is represented as seated on its vehicle, a snow-white elephant. The element of ether or space stimulates the sense of hearing, so the power of hearing (śravaṇendriya) and sound-as-such (śabda tanmātra) are associated with the viśuddha cakra, together with the power of speaking (vāgēndriya).

In the bindu of ham is Sadashiva, the deity of the cakra, in his androgynous form as half Shiva and half Shakti. He is described as "the great snow-white deva, three-eyed and five-faced, with ten beautiful arms, and clothed in a tiger's skin. His body is united with that of Girija, and he is known by what his name, Sadashiva, signifies (the Beneficent One)."<sup>24</sup>

The left half of his body is of a golden colour, and the right half is silver. He is to be visualized as sitting on a great lion seat that is placed on the back of a bull. The bull is the vehicle of Shiva, and the lion is the vehicle of Shakti.

The devī of the cakra is the white Shakti Sakini, whose form is light. Because bone is the bodily substance that she represents, she is pictured as seated on bones. She is found in the region of the moon in the centre of the lotus. Whereas the manipūra cakra is the region of fire and anāhata is the region of the sun, viśuddha is the region of the moon. It is described as "the moon without the mark of the hare". In other words, the moon here is stainless and unblemished. This lunar region is referred to as "the gateway of the Great Liberation" for those who have purified and conquered their senses.

One who concentrates on this lotus becomes "a great sage, eloquent and wise, and enjoys uninterrupted peace of mind. He sees the three periods (past, present, and future) and becomes the benefactor of all, free from disease and sorrow, long-lived, and the destroyer of endless dangers."<sup>25</sup>

The viśuddha cakra is the dwelling place of Saraswati, the goddess of speech, and when Kundalini becomes active here She may awaken in a yogi divine vocal powers that have been previously dormant. The biblical story of Pentecost is an example of a varṇamayī manifestation operating at the viśuddha cakra. About forty days after Easter, all the apostles had gathered at one place. As they sat together, suddenly there came from heaven a noise like a rushing wind that filled the whole house.

Then, in the midst of this sound and fury, tongues of flame appeared and settled on the head of each apostle. They were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and they began to speak in tongues with which they were unfamiliar. A huge crowd gathered, people from all over the world — Rome, Egypt, Libya, Greece, Crete — to hear what was going on. They were bewildered because the local people, who were Galileans, were speaking great spiritual truths in the native languages of the foreigners.

Gurumayi once said:

Viśuddha is the region of sānḍhibi, of transition. It is like twilight, where light and darkness exist together briefly, as one takes over from the other. It is the centre where purity and impurity exist together. After seeing the soul in the centre of anābhāta, you have transcended the passions and negative emotions. The drama is behind you. And yet, you have not entirely transcended duality. From viśuddha, your awareness can either move down into the world of turbulent emotions, or it can rise higher into the realm of the magnificent virtues.<sup>26</sup>

Ājñā Cakra

In Baba Muktananda's words:

As Kundalini keeps rising, as all the lower cakras are pierced, one's awareness comes to the space between the eyebrows, which is called the ājñā cakra. This cakra is also called the seat of the Guru. Ājñā means "command," and Kundalini will not move past this centre without the command of the inner Guru...<sup>27</sup>

There are very strict customs officials sitting at this point and regulating your entry into the higher realms. Ordinary customs officials are quite casual, because they let drugs pass through and various other things. But the customs authorities here are very stubborn, and they won't let any such thing pass.<sup>28</sup>

Baba continues:

As the ājñā cakra is pierced, you experience the merging state of the mind. The mind becomes very still and one-pointed, and the thoughts that have created disturbances become quiet. This is the beginning of the final stage of sādhanā, which leads to the ultimate attainment. After piercing through the ājñā cakra, Kundalini rises to the sabasrāra.<sup>29</sup>

The ājñā cakra is a lotus of two white petals, containing the white letters haṁ and kṣamī. Haṁ represents the final opening up of creation, and kṣamī is the letter that includes all of the other letters of the Sanskrit alphabet.<sup>30</sup> This implies that we have arrived at the end of the manifestation of the phenomenal universe. The seed letter of this cakra is Oṁ. We have now gone beyond the five material elements: earth, water, fire, air, and ether. This centre is the seat of the subtle tattvas of mind and prakṛti, primordial nature. Prakṛiti is the basic stuff of which the material universe is composed, a condensation of māyā that manifests the phenomenal world. And mind in this case includes the fourfold psychic instrument: the mind, subconscious mind, intellect, and ego.

The Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaya states that this cakra "shines with the glory of meditation."<sup>31</sup> As the Shakti works in this centre the mind becomes quiet, stable, and pure. Meditation now comes spontaneously. This is why the scriptures on bṛhaṇa yoga say that rāja yoga, the royal path, begins here.

Gurumayi said:

When you go deep into meditation or when you start meditating with the awakened Shakti, you feel incredible pressure in your forehead. Sometimes it feels as if it is going to burst open. Many times, you can feel heat coming out of the forehead. If you are a deep meditator, then the energy is very concentrated in the space between the eyebrows. You can hardly open your eyes. It is as though something is resting on your eyelids and you have no power to open them at all. Sometimes it is so cool, very, very soothing. Whenever it is very concentrated in this space between the eyebrows, there is a buzzing sound. It is as if somebody were drilling a hole there or millions of bees were swarming in the space. At times, it gets very intense. However, you should not be afraid. With the awakened Shakti, this happens spontaneously.<sup>32</sup>

The two petals and the pericarp of the lotus represent the three gunas: sattva, purity and light; rajas, passion and activity; and tamas, darkness and inertia. The deity of this cakra is Shambhu, another form of Shiva, and the Shakti is Hakini, representing the substance of marrow. There is the lightning-like itara liṅgam, set in an inverted triangle denoting Shakti. Itara means "that which enables one to cross the world of wandering." This is the site of the Rudra granthi, the final knot that must be opened before the seeker can enter the higher realms.

The ājñā cakra is also referred to as mukta-triveni, for it is here that the īḍā (Ganga), piṅgalā (Yamuna), and suṣumnā (Saraswati) once again converge. The term in Sanskrit means "the confluence of freedom."

The sacred syllable Oṁ is situated in a second triangle above the one in which the itara liṅgam rests. It is the inner Self in the form of the purified intellect and resembles a wickless flame because of its radiance. This is a beautiful vision that one can see in meditation.

The Saṭ Cakra Nirūpana states: "When the yogi closes the house which hangs without support, the knowledge of which he has gained by the service of his excellent Guru, and when the mind by repeated practice becomes dissolved in this place which is the abode of uninterrupted bliss, he then sees in the middle of and in the space above the triangle sparks of fire shining distinctly."<sup>33</sup>

This means that when the mind's connection with the world has been removed and when, as a result of meditation on Oṁ, the mind dissolves or merges here at the ājñā cakra, he sees sparks of light resembling fire within and above the triangle on which Oṁ rests. "The flame-like Self, auspicious and in the shape of Oṁ, is surrounded on all sides by sparks of light."<sup>34</sup>

The next verse continues: "He then also sees the light which is in the form of a flaming lamp. It is lustrous like the clearly shining morning sun and glows between the sky and the earth. It is here that supreme Shiva manifests Himself in the fullness of His might. He knows no decay and witnesses all, and is here as He is in the region of fire, moon, and sun."

In his commentary on this verse, Kalicharana explains that the phrase "glows between the sky and the earth" means that by its own lustre it makes visible everything between the mūlādhāra and the sahasrāra. Paramashiva can be seen here in the ājñā cakra as well as in the sahasrāra. Shiva and Shakti are in union here in the parabindu, the Blue Pearl, represented by the bindu or dot over the Oṁ. This is the double of the parabindu which is in the sahasrāra. The Blue Pearl can also be experienced at this centre as it shoots in and out of the eyes with great speed. The region of fire, moon, and sun refers to the a-ka-tha triangle in the sahasrāra.

It is here in the ājñā cakra that the yogi "joyfully places his prāṇa at the time of death and enters that supreme, eternal, birthless, primeval Deva, the puruṣa, who was before the three worlds, and who is known by Vedanta."<sup>35</sup>

Kalicharana elaborates at considerable length on this process of placing the prāṇa at the time of death. In brief, Kundalini is led upward through the different cakras to the ājñā cakra. "There the yogi dissolves all the diverse elements from the gross to the subtle in Kundalini. Last of all, he unites Her and the individual soul with the bindu, whose substance is Shiva and Shakti; then he pierces the brahmāraṇḍhra (at the crown of the head), leaves the body, and becomes merged in the Absolute."

Notes to Chapter 7

- 1 Songs of Kabir, translated by Rabindranath Tagore (New York: Samuel Weiser, 1974) 8:1-101, p. 52.
- 2 See Swami Vishnu Tirtha Maharaj, Devātmā Śakti, 5th edition, 1980 (Rishikesh: Muni Ki Rati, 1948), pp. 88-94.
- 3 Pandit Ananta Krishna Shastri, Saundarya Labari (Madras: Ganesh and Company, 1957), p. 29.
- 4 The English translation has been taken from The Serpent Power, by Sir John Woodroffe (first published, 1919; 7th edition, Madras: Ganesh and Company), 1964.
- 5 Ibid. The commentary is included with the text itself.
- 6 See the Adhyātma-viveka, quoted in the Dīpikā to verse 7 of the Hamsaḥ Upaniṣad.
- 7 See Appendix.
- 8 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaya 10-11.
- 9 Unpublished talk, August 24, 1993.
- 10 See The Serpent Power, p. 13.
- 11 Unpublished talk, August 25, 1993.
- 12 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaya 18.
- 13 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaya 21.
- 14 Unpublished talk, August 25, 1993.
- 15 Kaulāvalī Nirṇaya 3:85.
- 16 Bṛagavat Gītā 15:4.
- 17 Jnaneswar's Gīta 15:375-378.
- 18 Swami Muktiānanda, Play of Consciousness, translated by Swami Chidvilasananda, (Ganeshpuri : Gurudev Siddha Peeth, 1995), p.183.

The Cakras

- 19 From a commentary on the Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana by Shankara, who lived at least eight centuries after the great Shankaracharya.
- 20 Play of Consciousness, p. 8.
- 21 Ānanda Laharī 38.
- 22 Śiva Saṃbīta 5:84
- 23 Swami Muktananda, Where Are You Going? (Ganeshpuri : Gurudev Siddha Peeth, 1993), p. 127.
- 24 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 29.
- 25 Ibid., 31.
- 26 Unpublished talk, August 27, 1993.
- 27 Swami Muktananda, Kundalini, The Secret of Life, 3rd edition (Delhi, UBSPD, 1995), p. 37.
- 28 Swami Muktananda, From the Finite to the Infinite (New York: SYDA Foundation, 1986), vol 2, p. 86.
- 29 Kundalini, The Secret of Life, p. 37.
- 30 See Kshemaraja's commentary on the Śiva Sūtras 2:17.
- 31 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 32.
- 32 Swami Chidvilasananda, "Making the Moon and the Sun Rise," Darsan magazine 41/42 (1990), p. 85.
- 33 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 36.
- 34 See Kalicharana's commentary on verse 36.
- 35 Ibid., 38.

Great beings whose minds are free from māyā effortlessly see Thine abode wherein are the sun, moon, and fire, which is as subtle as a flash of lightning, and which is placed above the six lotuses in the forest of the great lotus. Seeing this, they are immersed in a wave of supreme bliss.

—Ānanda Labarī 21

CHAPTER 8

THE SAHASRARA :

Merging with the Immensity

The scriptures say that when the yogi's actions are good in all respects, through service to his Guru, then he rises above the ājñā cakra. The region between ājñā and the sahasrara at the crown of the head is the seat of the causal body. Whereas the Shaktis below the ājñā cakra are looking forward towards creation, the Shaktis above ājñā are looking backward towards dissolution, and are liberating forces.

The yogi has been meditating intensely on the primordial Oṁ in the ājñā cakra, and as a result of this there follow nine causal śaktis that are stages or subtle levels of sound, or nāda. In ascending order they are bindu (or ardha matra), ardha candra, rodbini, nāda, nādānta, śakti, vyāpti, samāna, and ūnmanī.<sup>1</sup> Each stage is subtler than the previous one. It is as though the sound of Oṁ leaves a trail behind it. It becomes subtler and finer, until finally it disappears altogether, taking one's consciousness with it to the ūnmanī state beyond the mind.

In Tibet, this is a common visualization and form of meditation — the flame at the ājñā cakra becoming finer and finer as it rises, until it disappears into a wisp at the very tip, leading one beyond the mind to pure Consciousness.

Up to samāna there is ātmā-vyāpti, realization of the inner Self. It is only at the stage of ānmanī that Śiva-vyāḍhi occurs — not only realization of the Self, but also the realization that the whole world is an aspect of the Self. Even in samāna there is still the play of māyā, with residual traces of thoughts and desires. Only at the ānmanī stage does māyā cease completely and one enters Shiva Consciousness. This is the sabaja or natural state of samādhi.<sup>2</sup> Gurumayi said:

This is the goal of meditation and contemplation. When all the impurities are washed away, you begin to perceive the luminous Self. As this awareness gradually becomes clearer and clearer, you can live a good and worthy life.

When you receive blessings from a Guru, a state of awareness arises. It is the pure awareness, "I am. I am all there is, I am all that is and all that is not — I am." A Guru has seen the Truth. A Guru lives in the Truth. The Truth is "I am," "I am the Truth."

The divine pulsation, "I am, I am." The scintillating Blue Pearl, "I am, I am." The culmination of all yoga, "I am, I am." All this is revealed within. And once that perfection permeates your being, you live in that experience all the time; there is no return.<sup>3</sup>

As we ascend into the sahasrāra, we enter a region that is inconceivable to the mind and indescribable in speech. Nevertheless, once we come down from it, we retain aspects of that experience which we can try to talk about. The Sanskrit word sahasrāra means "one thousand," for this supreme lotus has a thousand petals. The sahasrāra is the realm of pure Consciousness. It is lustrous and whiter than the full moon, and its filaments are tinged with the colour of the rising sun. On its petals are all the fifty letters of the Sanskrit alphabet, white in colour, and repeated twenty times. It is the source of absolute bliss.

We have already seen that the seat of the individual soul, hamsah, is the anāhata or heart cakra. The sahasrāra is the seat of the Supreme Self, Parama Hamsah. It is here that we realize the oneness of the individual soul and the Supreme Soul. This Supreme Hamsah is the all-powerful Great Light that devours the universe. It is also the Guru Principle.

The Pādukā Pañcaka says:

I meditate on the Guru in the lotus of a thousand petals, which is radiant like the cool rays of the full moon, whose lotus hands make the gestures which grant blessing and dispel fear. His raiment, garland, and perfumes are ever fresh and pure. His countenance is benign. He is in the Hamsah in the head. He is the Hamsah Himself.<sup>4</sup>

The scriptures say that there is an upward-turned lotus of twelve petals, which is immediately below the pericarp of the downward-turned sahasrāra and inseparable from it. Where the two pericarps meet, there is the mandala of the full moon, and within this is the a-ka-tha triangle mentioned in the Guru Gītā:

In the round space of the thousand-petalled lotus, there is a triangular lotus which is formed by the three lines beginning with a, ka, and tha, and which has ham and sah on two sides. One should remember the Guru, who is seated in its centre.<sup>5</sup>

A woman said that shortly after she received śaktipāt her body would vibrate with energy and she would utter odd sounds: "a-ka-tha...a-ka-tha...a-ka-tha...a-ka-tha...Hamsah...Guru Om." Then she would dissolve in bliss. This went on for a year, and she enjoyed it immensely, although she did not understand the significance of it. Then, while chanting this verse of the Guru Gītā one day, she glanced at the translation and saw it all spelled out for her. "What an incredible yoga," she thought, "that through the Guru's grace we can actually experience what the scriptures speak of."

The sixteen Sanskrit vowels beginning with a form the first line of this triangle, the first sixteen consonants beginning with ka form the second line, and the sixteen consonants beginning with tha form the third. The remaining letters ha, la, and kṣa are located in the angles. The first is the line of fire, and since fire is considered the origin of life, this line is associated with Brahma, creation, and rajoguṇa. The second is the line of the moon, connected with Vishnu, preservation, and sattvaguṇa. The third is the line of the sun, representing the twelve suns that rise to burn the world at the time of dissolution, so it is associated with Rudra, destruction, and tamoguṇa. The one Shakti becomes three in order to perform these various functions. In the scriptures, the sahasrāra is often called the region of sun, moon, and fire, and it is this angle that they are referring to.

The a-ka-tha triangle is the abode of Shakti and also of Paramashiva, the supreme Guru. The place of the Guru is on a jewelled altar within this triangle, and when a seeker meditates on the Guru's feet, it is here that they are found. The Pādukā Pañcaka says:

I adore in my head the two lotus feet of the Guru.
The jewelled footstool on which they rest removes all sin. They are red like young mango leaves. Their nails resemble the moon shining in all her glory.
Theirs is the beautiful lustre of lotuses growing in a lake of nectar.<sup>6</sup>

The Guru's feet are cool like the nectarean beams of the moon, for just as moonbeams counteract heat, devotion to the Guru's feet overcomes sorrow and suffering.

In the very centre of this triangle is the Blue Pearl, or parabindu. This scintillating blue dot is sometimes called the "cosmic creative drop," for it is the state of the gathered-up power of Consciousness that is about to create the universe. The Blue Pearl "sprouts" into three pearls, or bindus, and the lines connecting them form the a-ka-lha triangle. This triangle, composed of all the letters of the alphabet, is the source of all sound vibration; then these sounds or letters come down in sequence through the cakras. The entire universe of vibrating sound is evolved from the Blue Pearl.

Gurumayi said:

Meditate on the Guru in the form of the Blue Pearl. It sits in the centre of a vibrating triangle in the thousand-petaled lotus of the sabasrāra. You do not necessarily see only one Blue Pearl at a time; sometimes you see thousands and thousands of blue dots. The vision of the Blue Pearl is very intoxicating. In fact, it has the ability to remove the deepest sorrows in your heart. When suffering starts leaving you, you are able to hear the sound Om and you become new. All that is old in your being goes away; you become very light-hearted. You can almost feel what God feels.<sup>7</sup>

The scriptures say that the Blue Pearl is very secret and subtle, like the end of a hair that has been divided ten million times. It is the source of a mass of great bliss, which is liberation. In the centre of the Blue Pearl is the Great Void, the mahā śūnya, where the union of Shiva and Shakti finally takes place.

The Tantrāntara says: "The king among yogis becomes full of the bliss of the Absolute by making his mind the abode of the Great Void, which is set in the light of the sun, moon, and fire."

The Great Void should not be confused with the void that is associated with the state of deep sleep and the causal body, in which lie all the seeds of ignorance and of our future karmas. The mahā śūnya is the Absolute, the Supreme, the Immensity. It is not merely an empty space where objects are absent; it is actually full, for it is the source of all manifestation.

Baba says:

The Blue Pearl is subtler than the subtlest. It is the size of a sesame seed. Yet even though it is so tiny, it is very big; for this whole world of movable and immovable things is contained within it... Within the Blue Pearl are millions and millions of universes...

Having perceived this truth directly, Tukaram Maharaj, a great saint of Maharashtra, wrote, "The Lord of the universe builds a tiny house the size of a sesame seed and lives inside it. All the different gods — Brahma, Vishnu, and Mahesh — come and go inside this tiny house."<sup>9</sup>

Within the maṇḍala of the moon in the sahasrāra can be found the mysterious "pot of nectar," which the poet-saints and mystics speak of. Kalicharana explains that the moon has fifteen phases that are known and two that are secret. These last two phases, the sixteenth and seventeenth, are called amā-kalā and nirvāṇa-kalā, respectively.<sup>10</sup> They are very subtle and can only be revealed in meditation. They have the shape of a delicate crescent moon and are downward-turned. They are the source of the stream of nectar flowing from the sahasrāra down through the suṣumnā. This divine nectar has its origin in the blissful union of Shiva and Shakti. Baba describes it very beautifully:

Just as the rain follows thunder in the atmosphere, the same thing happens in the inner spaces. When the thunder (the meha nāda) sounds in the inner spaces,... a shower of nectar begins to fall. There is a pool of nectar behind the forehead, and... this nectar is released and drops on to the root of the tongue. When the inner nectar touches the tongue, the taste buds become extremely refined; then, even if you eat the simplest food, you relish it as pure elixir. When the inner nectar travels down to the gastric fire in the solar plexus, it spreads through all the nerves. This nectar nourishes the body so that it is not necessary to consume much food."

When this nectar is released, it flows through all the nādis and rejuvenates the body. Jnaneshwar Maharaj describes how the body is transformed once this nectar begins to flow. He says:

When heated metal is poured into a mould,
the wax of the mould melts and pours out;

And only the metal remains,
taking the form of the mould.

Similarly, beauty incarnates in the form of the body, covered by a veil of skin.

The beauty of the limbs looks like natural marble or the sprouting of seed jewels,

As if the lovely hues of the evening sky were transferred to the body,

Or as if an image were fashioned from the inner radiance of the spirit.

This is how the yogi's body appears when Kundalini has drunk of the nectar.

The god of death is even afraid to look at it.

Old age vanishes, the knot of youth is loosened, and the lost bloom of childhood reappears.

Like ever-new jewel buds opening on the boughs of a tree of gold, fine new fingernails grow.

Over the whole body, tiny new hairs spring forth like small splinters of rubies.

The palms of the hands and the soles of the feet are like red lotus flowers, and the eyes shine with an indescribable lustre.<sup>12</sup>

Some years ago an Australian housewife went up in the darśan line during an evening programme at the South Fallsburg Ashram. After she had pranamed to Baba, she returned to her place and became locked in meditation. There was some force, she said, that was trying to escape, like a root cracking through concrete. It was in the form of a cobra. It rose up to the heart area, where there was an exquisite lotus that was fully open. Her entire being turned blue. Then she became aware of something white on the crown of her head. She saw it was a white lotus, enormous like a cathedral, which had hundreds of petals, all vibrating and creating a choruś-like sound. At the tip of each petal was a golden jewel drop. Something was dripping from the crown of her head down through her body; it was like honey, but not sticky. Her whole being said, "This is grace." She was new to Siddha Yoga and was completely unaware of the significance of this experience.

The Siva Samīhitā says:

By seeing the region of the moon in the sahasrāra, all the planets become auspicious, all dangers are destroyed, all accidents are avoided, success in one's endeavours is attained, and all powers are acquired.
By the constant practice of yoga, one attains perfection and becomes equal to Shiva.<sup>13</sup>

The Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana describes very poetically the rising of Kundalini into the sabasrāra:

The Devi... having reached all the lotuses in the suṣumnā nādī, shines therein in the fullness of Her lustre. Then, in Her subtle state, fine like the lotus fibre and lustrous like lightning, She goes to the gleaming flame-like Shiva, the Supreme Bliss, and suddenly produces the bliss of liberation.<sup>14</sup>

As Kundalini rises, She absorbs all the tattvas of creation into Herself as if She were rolling up a mat. This is the process of laya, absorption or merging. The element of earth with the sense of smell and its associated tattvas in the mūlādhāra cakra dissolve into water at svādhiṣṭhāna, the element of water and the sense of taste are absorbed into fire at manipūra, fire and the sense of sight merge into air at anāhata, air and the sense of touch merge into ether at viśuddha, ether and the sense of hearing are absorbed into the mind and the other psychic instruments at ajñā, and finally the mind dissolves into the Self at the sabasrāra.

Shri Shankaracharya describes it like this:

My mind fell like a hailstone into that vast expanse of the ocean of the Supreme. Touching one drop of it, I melted away and became one with the Absolute. And now I abide in the joy of the Self.<sup>15</sup>

An interesting point the scriptures make is that Kundalini rises to the sabasrāra and returns to the mūlādhāra at the base of the spine, again and again, until She ultimately becomes stabilized in the sabasrāra and does not return. This accounts for the brilliant halos that artists depict around the heads of the saints. After Kundalini has stabilized in the sabasrāra, as in the case of a Siddha, She can still play within the pure area of unity-awareness between the sabasrāra and the ājñā cakra, but She no longer comes down through māyā below the ājñā cakra. While we are still doing sādbhana, we can have occasional experiences of the sabasrāra, but we again plunge back down through māyā. As Kundalini returns to Her place in the mūlādhāra cakra along the pathway of the suṣumnā, She again rolls out the mat of creation and all the tattvas and elements associated with the cakras reappear as She descends through them. Her ascent was laya-krama, absorption or dissolution, and Her descent is sṛṣṭi-krama, or creation:

O Mother! After Your body has been moistened with the nectar flowing from the sabasrāra, You again reach Your dwelling in the mūlādhāra through the suṣumnā. O Mother and Spouse of Shiva! They in whose heart You glitter are never reborn.<sup>16</sup>

A few years ago I was in an Intensive. During the final session of meditation, I looked up and saw that the ceiling of the meditation hall had dissolved into brilliant white light. That light began to descend until it absorbed me into it. Suddenly, I had the sensation of breaking through a barrier. As I came out on the other side, I was in an entirely different state. I was all-pervasive and utterly free. There was nothing I could not do. And the ecstasy was indescribable.

After a short time, my ordinary mind tried to reassert itself. It began to play one of its old familiar tapes, then another and another. I could clearly see that with each tape, I was tying myself up, as if with a rope. Soon I was bound hand and foot, and I was back in my normal waking state. Now, I had always thought that my ordinary state was fine — I was happy enough and had a good life. But compared with this other, tremendously expanded state, it seemed very contracted and limited indeed. And I saw that it was my own mental conditioning that had bound me and brought me down; no one else had robbed me of my freedom.

The awakened Kundalini Shakti begins to weaken our old conditioning and to change the way we see ourselves. She shows us that we are not small; we are potentially infinite.

Some people have an experience of the final state when they receive saktipāt and mistakenly think they are fully realized. This happened to one woman following an Intensive with Baba. It took her completely by surprise. "I wonder what I should do now?" she mused. "I really didn't expect this to happen so soon! Where do I go from here?" After some reflection, she decided to spend the rest of her life on one of her favourite beaches in Hawaii. Shortly thereafter, however, she found herself back in her old familiar state. She was crushed. What had she done wrong? How had such a fall occurred? She hadn't done anything wrong. She had been given a great gift — an unmistakable experience of the ultimate state. Now, the work of purification had to begin in earnest so that one day she could hold on to that state and not let it slip through her fingers.*

* A few years ago, I came across a very interesting article by an eminent psychiatrist. He said that our civilization has reached the stage where we can experience the first four cakras. He said, however, "We have not reached viśuddha....Therefore, it is rather bold to speak of the sixth cakra, which is of course completely beyond our reach, because we have not even arrived at viśuddha....To speak about the lotus of the thousand petals, the sabasrāra centre, is quite superfluous because that is merely a philosophical concept with no substance whatever for us; it is beyond any possible experience."<sup>17</sup> I found this very interesting. There are many people who have experiences of the sabasrāra after receiving saktipāt. It doesn't mean that they are established there, but they certainly reach that realm now and then. So we must understand and appreciate the grace that is available to us. To know a saktipāt Guru and receive divine grace — there is nothing rarer on the face of this earth — or more precious.

A few years ago, a group of us went on a yatra, or pilgrimage, to Hardwar, a lovely town where the Ganges flows out on to the plains after descending from the Himalayas. Hardwar, like its neighbour Rishikesh, is a town of sannyāsins, orange-clad monks, whom you see everywhere you look, and the streets are lined with āśrams. One of the āśrams we visited was large and well-maintained, and the swāmī who was its director greeted us warmly. Many older men, all renunciants, lived there and spent their time engaged in scriptural study and discussion.

At one point the swāmī said to us, "Tell us about śaktipāt. I know that Baba and Gurumayi are śaktipāt Gurus, and we have read about it in the scriptures. But what is it like? What is your experience of it?"

So we began to share some of our experiences. Many of us were Westerners, and there was nothing extraordinary about our backgrounds. But we all had had profound experiences of the Self as a result of receiving the Guru's grace and the awakening of Kundalini. As we shared our stories, I could not help watching the faces of those elderly men, filled with longing and wistfulness. I can still see them in my mind's eye. In spite of all their spiritual practices and their years of austerities, their scriptural knowledge remained merely on the intellectual level; they had not had the direct, first-hand experiences we were describing. It was one of those moments when we realized how truly fortunate we were.

Whenever I contemplate these experiences, I remember Baba's words:

O supremely beautiful and effulgent Kundalini!
Through Your grace, even an ordinary person becomes blessed, and is able to see the Supreme Principle within himself.<sup>18</sup>

Describing the final attainment, Baba said:

Just as a river, after flowing for a long time, merges in the ocean and becomes the ocean, when Kundalini has finished Her work and stabilized in the sahasrāra, you become completely immersed in God. All your impurities... are destroyed, and you take complete rest in the Self. The veil which made you see duality drops away, and you experience the world as a blissful play of Kundalini, a sport of God's energy. You see the universe as supremely blissful light, undifferentiated from yourself, and you remain unshakeable in this awareness. This is the state of liberation, the state of perfection.<sup>19</sup>

Baba explained that at first the Blue Pearl appears briefly, like a flash of lightning. It may shoot in and out of the eyes in an instant. Gradually, its brilliance increases and it stabilizes before your vision. Ultimately, you must penetrate the Blue Pearl. Gurumayi says:

As you meditate and meditate, you feel hollow. You go deeper and deeper within yourself. As you go deeper... there comes a point, a tiny point; and through that, all of a sudden you understand everything. You are able to see everything. You are able to hear everything. You are able to go everywhere. It is an amazing state.<sup>20</sup>

One day the Blue Pearl explodes, and its light fills the universe, and you experience your all-pervasiveness. You lose the awareness of your own body, and merge with the body of God. The Shaivite scriptures speak of this, saying:

The yogi is struck with awe, and in this astonishment he achieves the great expansion of Consciousness. Thus he, the best of yogis, becomes established at the highest level of Consciousness. He grasps it firmly and never loses it. Thus he is no longer subject to worldly existence, the continuing round of birth and death which inspires fear in all living beings, because its cause, his own impurity, no longer exists.<sup>21</sup>

In this tremendously expanded state, the yogi sees the world as his own body.<sup>22</sup> He sees no separation between himself and others. In fact, there are no "others;" there is only one Self.

A great being once described what it is like to live in this state: "I am so closely linked to you all that you are like parts of my body... I am always with each one of you, wherever you happen to be... Know for certain that whatever you think and do, whether you are near or far away, it never escapes my attention."<sup>23</sup>

This is the state that the Siva Sūtras call लोकानन्दा समाधिसुखम् । — "The bliss of the world is the ecstasy of samādhi."<sup>24</sup> Baba describes this state in a very sublime way, saying, "The yogi who looks upon the universe as his own body, drinks the nectar of ecstasy. He sees the vast variety of objects, shapes, and forms, the endless modifications around him, as diverse and yet one; for they all appear in his own Self trembling with its bliss."<sup>25</sup>

Baba used to say that wherever he looked he would see the soft, gleaming, blue rays of Consciousness pulsating in all his states, whether he was meditating, sleeping, eating, or bathing. If he focused his attention, forms and shapes would emerge from that scintillating light; then, when he relaxed his focus, the names and forms would again dissolve into the shimmering blue rays of Consciousness.

The great poet-saint Tukaram Maharaj said, "I am drowning in inner bliss, and I see it reflected all around me. When this bliss arises within, one enters an entirely different realm where supreme bliss pervades everywhere. It stretches above and below, from east to west, from north to south. It is lapping on all sides. What should or shouldn't I do now? My refuge is now the feet of my Guru."

Gurumayi continually reminds us that this path is not just about feeling good, or attaining some lesser goals. This path is for mokṣa, liberation — the highest aim of human existence. And she tells us that this state is attainable. Once we receive śaktipāt, we have the Master to guide us. Now, we must have the commitment and the determination to travel the path to the end, and we must cooperate with the Guru in the task of patiently trimming away our small ego and limited notions of who and what we are. Although this may be uncomfortable or even painful at times, it is essential.

Shaivism says: "It is only a few who, blessed with the wealth of contemplation on the Absolute, ascend into the light of Shiva, which is their own true nature... Others, afflicted by egoism, do not do so."<sup>26</sup>

The Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaṇa says:

That most excellent of men who has controlled his mind and known the sabasrāra is never again born in the Wandering, the world of birth and death, as there is nothing in the three worlds that binds him to it. His mind being controlled and his aim achieved, he possesses complete power to do all that he wishes, and to prevent that which is contrary to his will. He is able to roam the inner spaces. His speech, whether in prose or verse, is ever pure and sweet.<sup>27</sup>

He is jīvanmukta, liberated though still living in a body, and attains mokṣa or videha kaivalya, bodiless liberation, when he leaves his physical body.

"The wheel is broken; the Desireless is attained. The river bed is dry; no water flows. No more will the broken wheel roll. This is the end of sorrow."<sup>28</sup>

This is the supreme state that awaits us at the culmination of the inner journey of Kundalini. May the Divine Mother ever bestow Her grace upon us.

Notes to Chapter 8

- 1 See introduction by Jaideva Singh to Śiva Sūtras translated and edited by Jaideva Singh (New Delhi: Motilal Banarsidas, 1979), p. xli.
- 2 See Kshemaraja's commentary on Śiva Sūtras 3:7.
- 3 Swami Chidvilasananda, "Creating a Body of Light," Darshan magazine, 41/42 (1990), p. 172.
- 4 Introductory verse to the Pādukā Pañcaka in The Serpent Power, by Sir John Woodroffe (first published, 1919; 7th edition, Madras: Ganesh and Company, 1964), p. 481.
- 5 Guru Gītā 58, in The Nectar of Chanting (Ganeshpuri : Gurudev Siddha Peeth, 1990), p. 23.
- 6 Pādukā Pañcaka, verse 6.
- 7 "Creating a Body of Light," p. 169.
- 8 From the commentary on Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 52; see Woodroffe, The Serpent Power, (first published, 1919; 7th edition, Madras: Ganesh and Company, 1964), p. 467.
- 9 Swami Muktananda, Kundalini, The Secret of Life, 3rd edition (Delhi, UBS/PD, 1995), p. 42.
- 10 See Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 46-47.
- 11 Kundalini, The Secret of Life, pp. 39-40.
- 12 Jnaneshwar's Gītā 6:249-50, 253-54, 259-60, 262, 264-65.
- 13 Śiva Sambīta 5:150.
- 14 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 51.
- 15 Viveka Cūḍāmaṇi 482.
- 16 A rendering of Bhuvareśvarī 10, from the Tantrasāra.
- 17 C. G. Jung, Psychological Commentary on Kundalini Yoga (Zurich: Spring Publications, 1976), pp. 6, 16-17.
- 18 Kundalini Stavaka (New York: SYDA Foundation, 1979).
- 19 Kundalini, The Secret of Life, pp. 44-45.
- 20 From an unpublished talk, October 1, 1984.
- 21 Spanda Nirṇaya.
- 22 Śiva Sūtras 1:14.
- 23 Shri Ananda Mayi Ma, Matri Darshan (Germany: Mangalam Verlag S. Schang, 1983).
- 24 Śiva Sūtras 1:18.
- 25 Swami Muktananda, Siddha Meditation- Commentary on the Śiva Sūtras and Other Sacred Texts (Ganeshpuri : Gurudev Siddha Peeth, 1982), p. 38.
- 26 Spanda Sandoba.
- 27 Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpana 45.
- 28 Udāna, a Buddhist scripture.

BABA MUKTANANDA'S

---

Prayer to Kundalini

O Goddess Kundalini!
You are red like the morning sun.
When You bestow Your grace, the inner awakening takes place,
and You continually shower
the nectar of supreme bliss.

O Goddess!
Bestow Your compassionate glance upon me.
When Your glance of grace falls upon a human being, he becomes God.

You are my own radiant, joyful, supremely divine,
and all-pervading Self.

O Mother Kundalini!
Only Your gracious glance can establish me in my own Self.
Through Your blissful glance,
all beings live joyfully.

O Mother Kundalini!
manifest within me.

APPENDIX

The Tattvas or Principles of Creation According to Kashmir Shaivism

The Tattvas of the Universal Experience

1. Śiva Tattva
2. Śakti Tattva
3. Sadāśiva or Śadākhyā Tattva
4. Iśvara Tattva
5. Śuddha Vidyā or Sad Vidyā Tattva

The Tattvas of the Limited Individual Experience

6. Māyā — illusion, the veiling or obscuring force

The Five Kañcukas, or Cloaks

7. Kalā — limitation of omnipotence
8. Vidyā — limitation of omniscience
9. Rāga — limitation of completeness
10. Kāla — limitation of eternal existence
11. Niyati — limitation of omnipresence

The Tattvas of the Limited Individual

12. Puruṣa
13. Prakṛti

The Tattvas of Mental Operation

14. Buddhi — intellect
15. Ahamkāra — ego
16. Manas — mind

The Tattvas of Sensory Experience

The Five Senses of Perception

17. Śravaṇendriya — the power of hearing
18. Sparṣendriya — the power of feeling by touch
19. Cakṣurindriya — the power of seeing
20. Rasānendriya — the power of tasting
21. Ghrāṇendriya — the power of smelling

The Five Powers of Action

22. Vāgendriya — the power of speaking
23. Upaṣṭhendriya — the power of procreation and sexual enjoyment
24. Payvindriya — the power of excretion
25. Hastendriya — the power of handling
26. Pādendriya — the power of locomotion

The Five Tanmātras or Subtle Elements of Perception

27. Śabda Tanmātra — sound
28. Sparśa Tanmātra — touch
29. Rūpa Tanmātra — colour
30. Rasa Tanmātra — flavour
31. Gandha Tanmātra — odour

The Tattvas of MaterialityThe Five Gross Elements

32. Ākāśa — ether
33. Vāyu — air
34. Tejas or Agni — fire
35. Āpas — water
36. Pr̥thivī — earth

Paramashiva, the Ultimate Reality, transcends all of these thirty-six tattvas. He is the Pure Consciousness unaffected by time or space, limitation or change, while existing as the foundation or substratum of all. Along with His transcendental aspect, however, He also has an immanent aspect that descends through the various principles of creation.

The first five tattvas comprise the Pure Creation. The true nature of the Divine has not yet been veiled. Shiva and Shakti are the eternal and mutually inseparable realities. The notion of a universe begins to emerge in the sadāśiva tattva, but it is vague and indistinct, still in the depths of Consciousness. It becomes more clearly defined in the īśvara tattva and increasingly so in the śuddha vidyā tattva, but there is no separation between the 'I,' or experiencing subject, and the object of experience, the universe.

Appendix

The sixth tattva, māyā or illusion, creates a sense of differentiation. It makes the one Universal Consciousness appear to be broken up into duality and multiplicity. The kañcukas, or cloaks, the tattvas from seven to eleven, limit and shrink the powers of the Supreme. The result of māyā and the kañchukas is the creation of puruṣa and prakṛti. The subject and the object have now split apart. Puruṣa is the individual soul, the limited subject who undergoes experience. Prakṛti is what is experienced, the objective manifestation, with the three gunas or qualities of nature. The tattvas of mental operation are fourteen through sixteen: the intellect, which ascertains or discerns; the ego, which identifies one as a particular person; and the mind, which builds up perceptions and concepts. The tattvas of sensory experience, seventeen through thirty-one, include the indriyas, which are not sense organs but powers which operate through the sense organs, and the tanmātras, or subtle elements of perception. The tanmātras themselves are abstract qualities which become perceptible only later in material objects. The senses have no meaning without their objects.

The tattvas of materiality, the gross elements, represent the greatest degree of limitation and contraction. Although they are found throughout the body, they have centres of force in their corresponding cakras. The element of earth represents all matter in a solid state, such as bones and muscles. Water includes liquids, such as urine and saliva; fire manifests as hunger and thirst, heat and light; air manifests as the breath. Ether spreads outward in all directions, radiating lines of force symbolized as the "Hair of Shiva." It is the space in which all the other forces operate. With the appearance of these final tattvas, the descent of the Supreme into matter is now complete.

G L O S S A R Y

Abhinavagupta: (ca. 950-1015): Commentator and exponent of Kashmir Shaivism. Of the lineage of Vasugupta and Somananda, and author of Tantraloka, Tantrasāra, and Īśvara Pratyabhijñā Vimarsinī.

Advaya Taraka Upaniṣad: One of the one hundred and eight Upaniṣads in the collection of the Muktika Upaniṣad.

Ājñā cakra: The spiritual centre located between the eyebrows. The awakened Kundalini passes through this cakra only by the command (ājñā) of the Guru.

A-ka-tha triangle: A vibrating triangle in the sahasrāra composed of all the letters of the alphabet; the source of all sound.

Amā-kalā: The secret sixteenth phase of the moon; together with nirvāna-kalā, it is the source of the stream of nectar flowing from the sahasrāra.

Anāhata cakra: The spiritual centre located at the heart. The unstruck (anāhata) sound heard in meditation originates in this centre.

Ānanda-kānda: A red lotus of eight petals below the anāhata cakra; it is here that mental worship of one's chosen deity is performed.

Ānanda Laharī: "Wave of Bliss," a beautiful hymn of praise to the Devi, from the Saundarya Laharī by Shankaracharya. It deals with Kundalini, the cakras, and yoga, and gives the essence of Śrī Vidyā.

Arjuna: The third of the five Pandava brothers and one of the heroes of the Mahābhārata. It was to Arjuna that Krishna imparted the knowledge of the Bhagavad Gītā.

Āsana: Various bodily postures practised to strengthen the body and purify the nādīs.

Āśram: A spiritual institution or community where spiritual discipline is practised; the abode of a saint or holy being.

Baba: A term of affection for a saint or holy man, meaning "father."

Bandha: Lock; an exercise of haṭha yoga. The three main locks are jālandhara bandha, in which the head is bent forward and the chin is pressed against the chest; uddiyāna bandha, in which the stomach muscles are pulled inward towards the spine; and mūla bandha, in which the anus is pulled inward.

Glossary

Bhagavad Gītā: One of the essential scriptures of Hinduism, a portion of the Mahābhārata, in which Krishna instructs Arjuna on the battlefield on the nature of God, the universe, and the Self, on the different forms of yoga, and on the way to attain God.

Bhagawan: the Lord; a term of address for God or saints denoting the glorious, divine, venerable, and holy.

Bhastrikā: A form of prāṇāyāma known as the "bellows breathing," in which the breath is drawn forcefully in and out.

Bhuvaneshvari: "Lady of the Spheres," one of the names of the Devi.

Bija mantra: Seed letter, a basic sound from the Sanskrit language, the repetition of which manifests the object or deity that it represents.

Bindu: Dot or point; the Blue Pearl, a compact mass of Shakti gathered into an undifferentiated point, ready to manifest as the universe.

Blue Pearl: See bindu.

Brahma: The creator; one of the Hindu trinity of Brahma, Vishnu, and Shiva.

Brahmā-dvāra: The "door to the Absolute," the entrance to the sūṣumnā nādī at the mūlādhāra cakra.

Brahmā nādī: The "channel of the Absolute," the space within the citrīṣī nādī through which Kundalini passes.

Brahmāṇḍa: The macrocosm, the universe.

Brahmāraṇḍbra: A subtle centre in the crown of the head, at the fontanelle.

Caitanya: The fundamental Consciousness which is absolutely free; a caitanya mantra is conscious or alive with Shakti.

Cakra: One of the six major energy centres in the sūṣumnā nādī.

Chandi: A form assumed by the Devi to destroy the demon Chanda.

Causal body: The body in which the deep-sleep state is experienced, represented by a black light the size of a fingertip; its seat is in the heart.

Citrīṣī: A subtle, moonlike nādī within the sūṣumnā.

Darśan: Seeing or being in the presence of a saint, a deity, or a sacred place.

Devatā: Deity.

Devi: Goddess.

THE SACRED POWER

Devi Aparad Kṣamāpana Stotra: "May the Devi Grant Me Pardon," a hymn to the Divine Mother composed by Shankaracharya.

Dhātus: The various bodily substances: skin, blood, flesh, fat, bone, and marrow.

Dikṣā: Initiation, the spiritual awakening of the disciple by śaktipāt through a look, word, thought, or touch of the Guru.

Divya Dikṣā day: The day of divine initiation, when one receives śaktipāt.

Durga: One of the names of the Divine Mother. In Her personal form, She is portrayed as an eight-armed goddess who rides a lion and carries weapons to combat the demonic forces and our evil tendencies.

Evolution: The process initiated with śaktipāt; the path of return to the source, carried out by the awakened Kundalini.

Granthi: A knot in the suṣumnā which must be pierced by the awakened Kundalini. The three knots are: Brahmā granthi in the mūlādhāra cakra, Viṣṇu granthi in the anābhava cakra, and Rudra granthi in the ājñā cakra.

Gross or physical body: The body in which we experience the waking state. It is associated with a red aura the size of the physical body, and its seat is in the eyes.

Gunas: The three basic qualities of nature. They are sattva—purity, light, goodness; rajas—activity, passion; and tamas—darkness, inertia, ignorance.

Gurudev Siddha Peeth: (Siddha Peeth, lit. "abode of the siddhas") The main āśram of Siddha Yoga, and the site of the Samadhi Shrine of Baba Muktananda. It was founded in 1956, when Bhagawan Nityananda instructed Swami Muktananda to live in a simple three-room compound near Ganeshpuri, Maharashtra.

Guru Gītā: The "Song of the Guru," a garland of mantras in the form of a dialogue between Shiva and Parvati, which explains the identity of the Guru with the Absolute and describes the nature of the Guru, the Guru-disciple relationship, and meditation on the Guru.

Hamsab Upaniṣad: A Yoga Upaniṣad of the Śukla Yajur Veda, dealing with the Hamsab and the Paramahamsab.

Hamsab: The individual soul in the heart.

I Am: Purno'ham vimarśa, the perfect non-relational 'I'-consciousness.

Idā: The moon nādī, on the left side of the suṣumnā.

Glossary

Involution: The process through which the Supreme descends into matter, from the subtle tattvas to the gross.

Intensive: A programme designed by Swami Muktananda to give direct initiation through the awakening of the Kundalini energy.

Jada: Lifeless, inert. A jada mantra has not been infused with Shakti by a Master.

Japa: Repetition of a mantra.

Jivanmukta: One who is liberated while still in the physical body.

Jnaneswar Maharaj (1275-1296): Foremost among the saints of Maharashtra and a child yogi of extraordinary powers. His verse commentary on the Bhagavad Gītā, the Jñāneśwari, in Marathi, is one of the world's most important spiritual works. He also composed a short work, the Amṛtānubhav, and over one hundred abhangas, or devotional songs in Marathi, which describe various spiritual experiences following the awakening of Kundalini.

Kabir (1440-1518): A great poet-saint who lived his life as a weaver in Varanasi.

Kāla: One of the five kañcukas. It is the cloak that limits the supreme Self's condition of eternal existence. It brings into being the sequential existence of things and the temporal order — past, present, and future.

Kalā: One of the five kañcukas. It limits the universal condition of omnipotence.

Kalāvati: One of the categories of the manifestation of awakened Kundalini. It involves the purification of the thirty-six tattvas, or principles of creation, and pertains to laya yoga.

Kali: The form of the Divine Mother that embodies the power of dissolution and destruction.

Kalicharana: Commentator on the Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaya and the Pādukā Pañcaka.

Kañcukas: The cloaks that the Supreme voluntarily throws over Himself which limit and contract His powers.

Kāṇḍa: The bulb-shaped origin of all the nādīs, located between the anus and the reproductive organ.

Karma: Physical, verbal, or mental action.

Kashmir Shaivism: A non-dual philosophy that recognizes the entire universe as a manifestation of Shakti, the divine conscious energy. It explains how the formless, unmanifest Supreme Principle manifests as the universe.

Kaulāvalī Nirṇaya: A Tantric text dealing with rituals, mantras, and mudrās.

Khecārī mudrā: A technique in hatha yoga in which the tongue curls back upward against the palate and into the nasal pharynx, opening the way to the sahasrāra.

Krishna: The eighth incarnation of Vishnu, whose life story is described in the Śrimad Bhagavatam and the Mahābhārata, and whose spiritual teachings are contained in the Bhagavad Gītā.

Kriyās: Bodily movements caused by the awakened Kundalini in order to purify the body and nervous system.

Kriyāvati: One of the categories of the manifestation of awakened Kundalini. It pertains to hatha yoga and is characterized by spontaneous physical kriyās — āsanas, bandhas, prāṇāyāma, and mudrās.

Kshemaraja: The brilliant disciple of Abhinavagupta, who wrote a commentary on the Śiva Sūtras and composed the Pratyabhijñā-bṛdayam and other important works of Kashmir Shaivism.

Kumbhaka: Voluntary or involuntary retention of the breath.

Kundalini: The primordial Shakti or cosmic energy that lies dormant in a coiled form in the mūlādhāra cakra. When She is awakened, She begins to move upward through the suṣumnā, piercing the cakras and initiating various yogic processes which purify and rejuvenate the entire being. When She enters the sahasrāra at the crown of the head, the individual soul merges into the universal Self.

Lakshmi: The goddess of wealth and prosperity and the consort of Vishnu.

Lalitā Sahasranāma: "The Thousand Names of Lalita," in the form of a dialogue between the sage Agastya and the god Hayagriva; the text has evolved from the Brāhmaṇḍa Purāṇa.

Laya-krama: The process of absorption or dissolution; the upward journey of Kundalini.

Liberation: Freedom from the cycle of birth and death; the state of realization of oneness with the supreme Consciousness.

Madhya: The intermediate degree of intensity of śaktipāt.

Mahānirvāṇa Tantra: "The Tantra of the Great Liberation," which discusses liberation, the worship of the Absolute, dharma or righteous behaviour, mantras, and rituals.

Mahārtbamañjarī: A Shaivite text of the 12th century, composed by Maheshvarananda.

Mabā Śūnya: The Great Void. It is emptiness in the sense that it is without manifest creation. It is not a state of non-existence because it has the nature of Being, Consciousness, and Bliss Absolute.

Glossary

Mahesh: A name of Shiva.

Mahiśāmardini Stotra: A hymn to Durga as the powerful conqueror of demons. Mahisharmardini was the slayer of the demon Mahisha, who took the form of a buffalo.

Manda: The mildest degree of śaktipāt.

Mandala: The geometric form which corresponds to a particular tattva, or principle of creation.

Maṇipūra cakra: The spiritual centre located in the navel region.

Māyā: Illusion, the force that shows the unreal as real, and presents what is temporary and short-lived as eternal and everlasting.

Mokṣa: Liberation, freedom from the cycle of birth and death; the state of realization of oneness with the Absolute.

Mount Kailas: A mountain peak in the Himalayas in present-day Tibet, revered as the abode of Shiva; a name for the sahasrā at the crown of the head.

Mudrās: Various advanced bhāṣya yoga techniques practised to hold the prāṇa within the body and to force Kundalini to enter the susumnā; symbolic gestures and movements of the hands which express inner feelings and states.

Mūlādhāra cakra: The spiritual centre at the base of the spine where Kundalini lies dormant and in a coiled form like a serpent.

Nāda: Inner divine music or sound.

Nādī: A channel of the subtle body which carries the prāṇa or vital force.

Nirvāṇa-kalā: The secret seventeenth phase of the moon; together with amā-kalā, it is the source of the stream of nectar flowing from the sahasrā through the susumnā.

Niyati: One of the five kañcukas. It limits the universal condition of all-pervasiveness and gives rise to the limitation of space and causation.

Nyāsa: A yogic technique by which the subtle body is infused with prāṇa. This is done by touching particular areas of the body while reciting certain seed mantras.

Om: The primal sound, from which the entire universe emanates.

Om Namah Śivāya: The mantra of the Siddha lineage, meaning "Salutations to Shiva," the inner Self. Namah Śivāya has five syllables and is called the pañcākṣari mantra.

THE SACRED POWER

Pādukā Pañcakā: "Five-fold Footstool of the Guru," a short text of seven verses on the twelve-petalled lotus, which is inseparable from the pericarp of the sabasrāra.

Parā: The subtlest level of speech; the vibration of the Divine Mind that brings about the manifestation of the universe.

Paramahāmsah: The supreme Self in the sabasrāra.

Paramārthasāra: A summary text by Abhinavagupta of some of the essential teachings of Kashmir Shaivism.

Parātrīmśika Vivaraya: Perhaps the most complex work of Abhinavagupta, a commentary on a set of verses said to form the concluding portion of the Rudra Yamala Tantra.

Pindānda: The human body, the microcosm.

Pingalā: The sun nādī, on the right side of suṣumnā.

Play of Consciousness: Swami Muktananda's spiritual autobiography, delineating the entire journey of Kundalini from Her awakening to Her final merging with Shiva.

Prakṛti: Primordial nature; the basic stuff of which the material world is made.

Prāṇa: The vital force.

Prāṇava: The word which refers to the mystic syllable Om̄.

Prāṇāyāma: The regulation and control of the breath.

Pratyabhijñā: The doctrine of recognition of Kashmir Shaivism. A digest of this philosophy, called the Pratyabhijñābhṛdayam, was prepared by Kshemaraja, the disciple of Abhinavagupta.

Puruṣa: The individual soul, the experiencing subject.

Radha: The childhood companion and consort of Krishna, celebrated as the embodiment of devotion.

Rāga: One of the five kañcukas. It limits the universal condition of completeness and is the cause of attraction to particular objects or people.

Rama: The seventh incarnation of Vishnu, whose life story is told in the Rāmāyana; a name of the all-pervasive supreme Reality.

Ramana Maharshi (1879-1950): The great sage of Arunachala, a sacred hill in South India.

Ramananda (15th century): A saint who revitalized the path of devotion in the north. Kabir, the weaver, was his disciple.

Rg Veda: See Vedas.

Glossary

Rudra: A name of Shiva.

Rumi, Jalaluddin (1207-73): The most eminent poet-saint of Persia. After meeting Shams-i-Tabriz, an ecstatic wandering saint, he was transformed from a scholar into an intoxicated singer of divine love.

Sādhanā: The practice of spiritual discipline.

Sabaja samādhi: The natural state of samādhi, the state of the siddha or perfected Master, in which one perceives the world and everything in it as the light of Shiva in various forms.

Sahasrāra: The thousand-petalled lotus at the crown of the head, the highest spiritual centre in the human being, where the union of Shiva and Shakti takes place.

Samādhi: A state of meditative union with the Absolute.

Samskāras: Impressions left by thoughts or actions in the past, which form our mental and emotional conditioning. They are stored in the suṣumnā.

Sandhi: A transition from one thing to another.

Saṅdhya: The morning and evening twilights.

Saṅkalpa: Thought or will, one of the four classical methods by which the Guru gives śaktipāt.

Sannyāsin: An ascetic ordained as a sannyasin; a renunciant, who has taken the formal vows of renunciation.

Saraswati: The goddess of music, knowledge, fluency in speech, and creative inspiration.

Saundarya Laharī: "Wave of Beauty," one of the most inspiring of all the devotional poems to the Devi, composed by Shankaracharya. It includes a description of the physical beauty of the Devi's form.

Self: Divine Consciousness residing in the individual.

Serpent Power, The: A work by Sir John Woodroffe, containing two texts on Kundalini, the Ṣaṭ Cakra Nirūpaya and the Pādukā Pañcaka, with a lengthy introduction and commentary.

Śabda Brahman: The Absolute in the form of sound, the divine inner nāda.

Shakti: Spiritual power; the divine cosmic power which creates and maintains the universe.

Śakti dāridrya: Poverty of Shakti; the condition of an individual soul whose powers have been limited and contracted by māyā.

Śaktipāt: The descent of grace, the transmission of Shakti or spiritual power from the Guru to the disciple.

Śambhavi mudrā: A state of spontaneous samādhi in which the eyes become focused within although they remain half-open.

Shankaracharya (788-820): A great sage who travelled throughout India expounding Advaita Vedanta, the philosophy of Absolute Non-dualism, which teaches the identity of the individual soul and the supreme Soul. He established maths or āśrams in the four corners of India.

Śāradā Tilaka Tantra: A great work by Lakshmana Deshikendra, disciple of Utpalacharya. He is said to have written the work out of compassion for those who wanted to know something about all the different forms of worship. It also deals with yoga and Kundalini.

Saṭ Cakra Nirūpaya: "An Investigation of the Six Cakras," a Sanskrit text composed in the 16th century by the great Master Purnananda Swami.

Shiva: The all-pervasive supreme Reality; one of the Hindu trinity of gods, who carries out the act of destruction or dissolution.

Śiva lingam: The most important symbol of Shiva, representing the impersonal aspect of God.

Śiva Mabimnāḥ Stotram: "Hymn to the Glory of Shiva," sung in the evening in Siddha Yoga Ashrams.

Śiva Samitī: A Sanskrit text on yoga that explains the practice of āsanas, prāṇayāma, and mudrās, performed in order to awaken Kundalini.

Śiva Stotrāvalī Tīkā: Kshemaraja's commentary on the Śiva Stotrāvalī, a collection of verses to Shiva by Utpaladeva, a devotional work belonging to the tradition of Kashmir Shaivism.

Śiva Sūtras: A Sanskrit text that Lord Shiva revealed to the sage Vasugupta. It consists of seventy-seven sūtras, or aphorisms, which were found inscribed on a rock in Kashmir.

Śiva Sūtra Vimarśinī: A commentary on the Śiva Sūtras by Kshemaraja.

Siddha: A perfected Master; one who has attained the state of unity-awareness and who experiences himself as all-pervasive.

Siddhis: Supernatural powers attained through mantra repetition, meditation, and other yogic practices.

South Fallsburg, New York: The location of Shree Muktananda Ashram, established as the international headquarters of the SYDA Foundation in 1979.

Glossary

Spanda Śāstras: A body of philosophical works in Kashmir Shaivism that elaborate the principles of the Śiva Sūtras. The main text is the Spanda Kārikās, on which a number of commentaries have been written: the Spanda Pradīpikā by Utpalabhatta, the Spandakārikā Vivṛitti by Ramakantha, and the Spanda Sandoha and the Spanda Nirṇaya by Kshemaraja.

Sṛṣṭi-krama: The process of creation; the return of Kundalini from the sahasrāra to the mūlādhāra cakra.

Subtle body: An energy body interpenetrating the physical body; according to the Prāśna Upaniṣad, the subtle body is composed of 720 million nādīs. It is the body in which we experience the dream state, and its seat is in the throat. It is associated with a thumb-sized white light.

Supracausal body: The body in which we experience the turiya, or transcendental state. It is a scintillating blue dot the size of a lentil seed and is called the bindu or Blue Pearl. Its seat is the sahasrāra.

Suṣumnā: The most important of all the nādīs, the central channel that extends from the base of the spine to the crown of the head. It is the pathway of the awakened Kundalini.

Svacchanda Tantra: A revealed scripture in six volumes in the tradition of Kashmir Shaivism, dealing with rituals and yogic techniques.

Svādbiṣṭhāna cakra: The energy centre within the suṣumnā in the sacral area.

Svāhā: "Hail to!" An exclamation used in making offerings to the deities during a yajña, a sacred fire ceremony.

Swāmi or Swāmiji: A term of respectful address for a sannyāsin, or saint.

Tantrāloka: A massive and encyclopedic work by Abhinavagupta in twelve volumes, containing the Shaiva philosophy and practices in all their aspects.

Tantras: Divinely revealed scriptures in the form of dialogues between Shiva and Parvati, revealing the secrets of attaining Self-realization through Kundalini awakening and through uniting the two principles, Shiva and Shakti.

Tantrasāra: A summary of the teachings of the Tantrāloka by Abhinavagupta.

Tattva: A principle of creation; according to Kashmir Shaivism, there are thirty-six tattvas from Shiva to the earth.

Tirumular: A South Indian saint who lived around the 8th century.

Tivra: The intense degree of śaktipāt.

Triveni: The place of confluence of the three sacred rivers: Ganga, Yamuna, and Saraswati, represented in the human body by the īdā, pingalā, and suṣumnā nāḍis. Yukta-triveni is at the mūlādhāra cakra, and mukta-triveni is at the ājñā cakra.

Tukaram Maharaj (1608-1650): A great poet-saint of Maharashtra born at Dchu, who composed thousands of abbangas, devotional songs in Marathi.

Turya: The fourth or transcendental state of consciousness beyond the states of waking, dreaming, and deep sleep, and pervading all the states; the state of the Self.

Uma: A name for Shakti, meaning light. This aspect represents the power to illuminate, or pure knowledge.

Unmanī: The Shakti which transcends the mind and is uninterrupted light.

Upaniṣads: The teachings of the ancient sages that form the knowledge or the end portion of the Vedas. The central teaching of the Upaniṣads is that the Self of man is the same as the Absolute.

Vajra: A subtle, sun-like nāḍi within the suṣumnā.

Varyamayī: One of the four main categories of the manifestation of awakened Kundalini. This may include the awakening of previously dormant vocal powers in a seeker, the spontaneous uttering of mantras or other sounds, creative literary inspiration, and intuitive wisdom. Varyamayī pertains to mantra yoga.

Vāyavīya Sambitā: The concluding section of the Śiva Purāṇa.

Vedānta: One of the schools of Indian philosophy. It contains the teachings of the Upaniṣads, which investigate the nature and relationship of the Absolute, the world, and the Self.

Vedas: The four ancient, authoritative Hindu scriptures, regarded as divinely revealed. The four Vedas are the Rg Veda, Yajur Veda, Sama Veda, and Atharva Veda.

Vedhamayī: One of the four main categories of the manifestation of awakened Kundalini, in which a seeker experiences the piercing of the cakras. Vedhamayī is associated with laya yoga.

Videha kaivalya: The final absorption into Consciousness of a realized being when he leaves his physical body; bodiless liberation.

Vidyā: One of the five kañcukas. It restricts the universal power of omniscience and is the cause of limited knowledge.

Glossary

Vijñāna Bhairava: A revealed text of Kashmir Shaivism, containing one hundred and twelve dhāraṇīs or centring techniques for entering into Shiva.

Visarga: Emanation, creation.

Vishnu: A name for the all-pervasive supreme Reality; one of the Hindu trinity of gods, representing God as the sustainer.

Viśuddha cakra: The energy centre at the base of the throat.

Viveka Cūḍāmani: "The Crest-Jewel of Discrimination," Shankaracharya's classic text of Advaita Vedanta.

Vṛtti: A mental or emotional quality associated with a particular cakra.

Vyāpti: Fusion, the process in which the gross tattvas are reabsorbed into the subtler ones. Ātmā-vyāpti is merging with the inner Self. Śiva-vyāpti is merging with the all-pervasive Shiva principle; the realization that the whole world is an aspect of the Self.

Wish-fulfilling cow: The sacred cow, considered to be a goddess who has the power to give milk whenever needed by gods and sages, and who grants one's wishes.

Wish-fulfilling tree: A celestial tree that has the power to grant the wish of anyone standing under it.

Yatra: Pilgrimage.

Yoga: The state of union with the Self, God; the practices leading to that state.

Yoga brahma: One who practised yoga but was unable to complete his sādhanā in a former lifetime. He continues his spiritual practice at the level of attainment he achieved and attains perfection in a later birth.

Yogakundalī Upaniṣad: A Yoga Upaniṣad of the Kṛṣṇa Yajur Veda, dealing with the awakening and rising of Kundalini.

INDEX

~

Abhinavagupta
on types of śaktipāt, 46-50

Air
and anābata cakra, 100

Ājñā cakra, 23, 107-9, 122
and Blue Pearl, 109
deity of, 108
lingam in, 108
and mind, 107
nāda (divine sounds) at, 113 and prakrti, 107 and the sabasrāra, 113
as seat of Guru, 106
seed mantra of, 86, 107
Shakti of, 108

A-ka-iba triangle, 115

Anābata (heart) cakra, 24, 99-104 and air, 100
deity of, 100
lingam in, 101
nāda (divine sounds) in, 78 piercing of, 75
qualities of, 101
seat of deity in, 100
seed mantra of, 100
Shakti of, 101
and Havisab, 100

Bandhas, 63. See also haṭha yoga

Bija mantras (seed letters), 86

Blue Pearl
in sabasrāra, 117-118

Body causal, 25
gross physical, 25 subtle, 25
supracausal, 24

Brahma, 116
as deity of mūlādhāra cakra, 88, 91

Buddhism, 10-11

Cakras
and association with sounds, 69-70 deities of, 85, 88
as energy centres, 84-85
lingams in, 89
as lotuses, 85 lower vs. higher, 74, 96 and material elements, 86
"petals" of, 85
piercing of, 75-78
seed letters of, 86 and the senses, 87
Shaktis of, 88
and latvas, 86
See also ājñā cakra, anābata cakra, manipūra cakra, mūlādhāra cakra,
sabasrāra; Subtle body,
svādhiṣṭhāna cakra; viśuddha cakra

Causal body, 25, 113

Chidvilasananda, Swami on the ājñā cakra, 108 on the Blue Pearl, 117 on the goal of meditation, 114 on the Goddess, 20 on Kundalini, 93, 94, 96 on the viśuddha cakra, 106

Cloaks (kañcukas), 26-27

Depression, 60

Dikṣā. See śaktipāt

Earth and mūlādhāra cakra, 90-91

Ether
and viśuddha cakra, 104

Fire, 89-90, 116 and manipūra cakra, 95-98

Index

Grace, 32-34
as divine function, 32
See also Guru

Great Void (mahā śūnya), 117-118

Gross physical body, 25

Guru
as bestower of initiation (śaktipāt), 33-41 as controller of awakened Kundalini, 41, 94 as grace-bestowing power of God, 33

Gurumayi
See Chidvilasananda, Swami

Hamsah, 99-100

Hatha yoga, 31-32
bandhas (locks) in, 63 and kriyās after śaktipāt, 62-69
 mudrās in, 63-65 origin of, 62
prāṇāyāma in, 65-68

Hearing, 104, 121

Heart cakra. See anābhava cakra

Heart opening, 76
See also anābhava cakra

Hopi Indians, 5-6

Īdā nādī, 89-90
See also nādīs

Initiation, See śaktipāt

Involution, 23, 26

Isha
as deity of anābhava cakra, 88, 100

Kabbala, 7-8

Kabir poems of, 4, 83

Kalāvati (śaktipāt manifestation), 73-75

Kali
as form of Shakti, 19

Kañcukas (cloaks), 26-27

Kriyās as beneficial, 57, 67-68
emotional, 56-57
after śaktipāt (in kriyāvati), 62-69 witnessing of, 57
See also haṭha yoga

Kriyāvati (śaktipāt manifestation), 62-69

Kundalini in Christianity, 4-5 as the Great Goddess, 15-20 in Jewish mysticism, 7-8 means of awakening, 31-41 names for, 3 in other cultures, 3-13 path of, 121-122
seen as serpent, 8-10
See also Kundalini Yoga, śaktipāt

Kundalini Yoga, 94-95

Kung of the Kalahari Desert, 6-7

Lakshmi
as form of Shakti, 19-20

Laya (absorption, merging), 121, 122

Letters of Sanskrit, 85, 114

Liberation, 127-128

Locks, 63
See also bandhas

Lotuses See cakras

Macrocosm identity with microcosm, 83

Mahā śūnya. See Great Void

Manipūra (navel) cakra, 24, 95-98
deity of, 96
and fire, 95-98
qualities of, 96
seed mantra of, 87, 95
Shakti of, 96

Mantra
as means of initiation, 36-37
See also mantra yoga

Mantra yoga and varnamayī (śaktipāt manifestation), 69-73

THE SACRED POWER

Māyā
 and descent of Shakti, 24
 as form of Shakti, 18
 overcoming, 24

Microcosm identity with macrocosm, 83

Moon, 89-90, 116-117, 120 and divine nectar, 118

Mudrās, 63
 See also baṭha yoga

Muktananda, Swami
 on ajñā cakra, 107 on Blue Pearl, 118 on creative power of Shakti, 15 on the Guru and Shakti, 41 on his initiation, 39-40 on kriyās, 56 on the divine nectar, 119 on śaktipāt (initiation), 33-34

Mūlādhāra (base of spine) cakra, 24, 25, 89-93
 deity of, 91
 and earth, 90-91
lingam in, 91-92
 qualities of, 90
 seed mantra of, 87
 Shakti of, 91

Mysticism
 Christian, 11-12
 Jewish, 7-8

Nāda (divine sounds), 78, 99 and the anābhava cakra, 113

Nādīs, 58, 84-86, 89-90 convergence of, 89, 108
 See also īḍā nādī, piṅgalā nādī,
sūṣumnā nādī

Names of God, 85-86

Navel cakra. See māṇipūra cakra

Nectar, divine, 118-120

Om
 meditation on, 113
 as seed mantra of ajñā cakra, 107

Piṅgalā nādī, 89-90
 See also nādīs

Poems
 by Kabir, 4, 83
 by Jnaneshwar Maharaj, 17-18, 98, 119-120
 by Shankaracharya, 16

Prāna, 65-68

Prāṇāyāma, 65-68
 See also baṭha yoga, prāṇa

Psychic instruments, 24

Purification
 after śaktipāt, 55-79
 See also kriyās

Radha
 as form of Shakti, 20

Rudra, 116
 as deity of māṇipūra cakra, 88, 96

Sacral cakra. See svādhiṣṭhāna cakra

Sadashiva
 as deity of viśuddha cakra, 88, 104

Sabasāra, 23-24, 113-129
 as abode of Great Void, 117-118 as abode of Paramashiva, 116
 as abode of Shakti, 116
A-ka-ṭha triangle in, 115-116 Blue Pearl in, 117-118, 125 divine nectar in, 118-120
 lotus of, 114-115 meaning of Sanskrit word, 114
 as seat of Supreme Soul, 115

Saint Teresa of Avila, 11-12

Samāḍbi, sabaja (natural), 114,

Samskāras (past impressions), 45 effects on śaktipāt, 45-46 expelling of, 55-61

Sanskrit
 power of letters in, 85 power of syllables in, 85-86

Saraswati
 as form of Shakti, 20
 in viśuddha cakra, 105

Seed letters (bija mantras), 86

Index

Serpent
as symbol of Kundalini, 8-10

Shakti contraction of, 23-24 descent of, 23-24
forms of, 17-20
See also Kundalini, śaktipāt

Śaktipāt (initiation), 33-42 by look, 38-40 manifestations of, 62-79
by touch, 34-35 types of, 47-52
by will or thought, 37-38
by word, 35-37

Shambhu
as deity of ājñā cakra, 88, 108

Shankaracharya, 15-16

Shiva
union with Shakti, 110

Siddhis, 85-86

Sounds associated with cakras, 69-70 divine, see nāda

Subtle body, 25, 58, 84
See also cakras, nādīs, prāṇa

Sun, 89-90, 116

Supracausal body, 24

Suṣumnā nādī, 89-90 and the prāṇa, 66-67
See also nādīs

Svādbiṣṭhāna (sacral) cakra, 24, 93-95
deity of, 94
qualities of, 94
seed mantra of, 87, 93
Shakti of, 94
and water, 93

Swan. See Hamsab

Taste, 93, 121

Tattvas, 73 absorption of by Kundalini, 121-122 and cakras, 84
as manifestation of Supreme, 84 of material elements, 84
subtle, 107

Throat cakra. See vīruddha cakra

Touch, 100, 121

Triangle, the a-ka-ka, 115-117

Tummo (Tibetan Buddhism), 10-11

Varnamayī (śaktipāt manifestation), 69-73 and creative inspiration, 70-71 and Pentecost, 105-106

Vedhamayī (śaktipāt manifestation), 75-79 and nāda (divine sounds), 78

Vishnu, 116
as deity of svādbiṣṭhāna cakra, 88, 93

Vīruddha (throat) cakra, 24, 104-6
deity of, 105
and ether, 104 and the moon, 105 and Saraswati, 105
seed mantra of, 87, 104
Shakti of, 105

Void, Great (mahā sūnya), 117-118

Water and svādbiṣṭhāna cakra, 93

Swami Muktananda Paramahansa

S I D D H A   Y O G A

and the Lineage of Siddha Masters

Siddha Yoga begins with the awakening of the transformative power known in the Indian tradition as Kundalini. This path to union with the Divine is guided by the grace of a living Master, a siddha. In the ancient tradition of the siddhas, through the Guru's graceful glance or sacred word of initiation, this inner power is kindled and the student is awakened into a more subtle awareness. As Kundalini unfolds, all the limiting, negative qualities dissolve, and divine virtues arise — love, compassion, generosity, wisdom. Thus the awakening, joined with the disciplines of yoga, leads to the attainment of higher knowledge and, ultimately, to Self-realization or enlightenment.

The capacity to awaken Kundalini has always been rare. In our own century, the Siddha Master Swami Muktananda initiated this process in thousands of seekers. He had himself received spiritual initiation, known as śaktipāt ("descent of power"), from the great soul Bhagawan Nityananda, who was then living in the village of Ganeshpuri in Maharashtra. On 15 August 1947, a day that Swami Muktananda later described as "the happiest and most auspicious day of my life," Bhagawan Nityananda stood close to his disciple and a ray of golden light began to pour out of his eyes and into Swami Muktananda's. Kundalini Shakti, which stirred within him in that moment, bestowed Her amazing fruits upon him even as he walked home from his

Bhagawan Nityananda

Guru's darśan hall. On that quiet country road, in the drifting mists of a monsoon shower, Swami Muktananda had the experience of the Absolute, of God-consciousness pervading every particle of the phenomenal world.

Swami Muktananda meditated in seclusion for nine years, seeing fewer and fewer people, simplifying every aspect of his life, increasing the focus of his spiritual practice, as with the laser beam of devotion and intention he penetrated layer after layer of ignorance and illusion. Ultimately he had the vision of his Guru, Bhagawan Nityananda; of his deity, Lord Shiva; and of his own form within a scintillating blue light, which then shattered to spread throughout the universe. This vision, of the oneness and the divinity of all things, stayed with Swami Muktananda to the end of his life.

Bhagawan Nityananda settled his disciple on a small piece of land near his own āśram in Ganeshpuri, and here Muktananda stayed, receiving visitors sent by his Guru and performing devotional practices. At the time of Bhagawan Nityananda's mahasāmādhi in 1961, Muktananda received a further level of initiation in which the power of Bhagawan's lineage to give śaktipāt was transferred to him.

Baba, as Swami Muktananda came to be known spent the remainder of his life giving śaktipāt and writing and speaking about the path of meditation that begins with this awakening. His āśram, which is now known as Gurudev Siddha Peeth, flourished as a centre of spiritual power and instruction, as seekers of every creed and from every country were welcomed by Baba Muktananda's vision of the divinity residing within the heart of every human being.

This great work has been expanded by his foremost disciple, Swami Chidvilasananda, who was designated by Swami Muktananda as his successor shortly before he took mahāsamādhi in 1982. She had been his disciple since early childhood and had travelled with him on two tours of the West, translating into English his writings, his lectures, and the many informal exchanges he had with his devotees. An advanced spiritual seeker from an early age, with a great longing for God, she became an exemplary disciple. She was guided meticulously in her sādhanā by Swami Muktananda, who carefully prepared her to succeed him as Guru. In early May of 1982, Swami Chidvilasananda took formal vows of saṃnyāsa, and a few days later Swami Muktananda bequeathed to her the power and authority of the Siddha lineage, the same spiritual legacy that his Guru had passed on to him. Since that time, Gurumayi, as she is widely known, has given śaktipāt to ever-increasing numbers of seekers, awakening in them the divine power that is worshipped by siddhas as the Goddess. In the words of Swami Muktananda:

Swami Chidvilasananda

Kundalini is Shakti, supreme energy, whom the sages worship as the Mother of the universe. Yogis make Her the goal of their yoga. Devotees sing Her name with love, and She becomes the object of their love. Enlightened men of knowledge perceive Her in all the forms and objects of the universe, and seeing everything as one in That, they merge in That.

FURTHER READING

Also by Swami Muktananda:

Play of Consciousness Where Are You Going?
Kundalini: The Secret of Life
Does Death Really Exist?
Meditate
I Have Become Alive
Light on the Path
Search for the Self Swami Muktananda in Australia
From the Finite to the Infinite
(Two volume set, casebound)

Set of Six Little Books:

The Self Is Already Attained      I Love You
A Book for the Mind      To Know the Knower
I Welcome You All With Love      God Is With You
(These books are also available separately)

By Swami Chidvilasananda:

My Lord Loves a Pure Heart Inner Treasures

Other Small Siddha Yoga Books

The Light of the Guru Everything Happens for the Best Blaze the Trail of Equipoise

You may order these books or obtain a current Price List for the books in English, Hindi, Gujarati or Marathi
by writing to:

CHITSHAKTI BOOKSTORE,
P.O.GANESHPURE, DISTRICT THANE,
MS 401 206

—
—
—
—
—

E

*When fire enters iron, it does not remain just iron.
Similarly, when Kundalini Shakti awakens in human beings,
They do not remain mere human beings.
They become filled with divine love, divine powers, and divine virtues.*

—Vayaviya Samhita

KUNDALINI is the name given to the inner spiritual power. According to the Siddha master Swami Muktananda, "It is only when Kundalini is awakened that we become aware of our true nature, of our greatness."

Since receiving initiation from Muktananda over twenty years ago, Swami Kripananda has been studying, teaching, and writing about this subtle science, as well as contemplating the unfolding of Kundalini within herself. The Sacred Power is a richly informative textbook compiled over her years of study and experience, based on courses she has developed for students and seekers throughout the world.

Rs. 125

UBSPD

UBS Publishers' Distributors Ltd.

ISBN 81-7476-152-7

9 788174 761521